Boston Bans All Night Club Amusements In Fire Probe

Cocoanut Grove Was of 'Tinderbox Construction,' Says Letter in Evidence

Toll Still Incomplete

By the Associated Press

Boston, Dec. 1.—A ban was clamped tonight on all amusement and dancing in 1161 Boston night clubs, hotels and restaurants as an aftermath of the Cocoanut Grove fire disaster, while separate city and State probes produced testimony that the night club was of "tinderbox construction" and that flames had raced like lightning through draperies that "looked like gauze."

While scores of funerals of fire victims were held throughout New England, there were these developments:

1. The death toll of the Saturday night blaze was revised downward by the Boston Committee on Public Safety from 484 to 474, but a number known to be dead were not named on the committee's list and unofficial compilations indicated the final cost in human life would approach 500.

2. Gov. Leverett Saltonstall told members of the Boston Licensing Commission to "act first and let someone question your authority later." The commission promptly banned dancing and floor shows in all night spots until they could be inspected.

By early evening about 50 night clubs and restaurants in which dancing was held had been closed, with padlocks on the doors and police posted nearby.

3. Assistant District Attorney Frederick T. Doyle opened a separate inquiry into the fire, under the direction of the State's attorney general, and announced that all testimony would be private, "in view of the fact that criminal prosecutions may result."

4. Doyle accepted a letter from a prominent Bostonian, written in January, 1939, to a Cocoanut Grove employe, saying: "There are several things you ought to give particular attention to. Your exits are very bad. You have a tinderbox construction. It should be in

Coffee Concern Exceeded Quota, WPB Charges

The War Production Board yesterday announced discipline of the M. E. Swing Co., large Washington coffee and tea firm, at 1013 E Street Northwest, for having "hampered and impeded the war effort" by keeping incomplete records, failing to file reports and exceeding the October coffee quota by 28,000 pounds.

The WPB restricted the company to 30,000 pounds of coffee a month for the next four months.

The Swing company is operated by E. M. Swing, does both wholesale and retail business and is classified as a "roaster." This firm was allotted a quota of 43,665 pounds of coffee for the month of October, but the finding of Ernest Kanzler, WPB director general of operations, said the company's sales for the month were 28,250 pounds more than the allotment.

Swing could not be reached for comment at his office yesterday and his aides declined to say anything about the WPB action.

Measure Goes to the Senate

By Robert De Vore
Post Staff Writer

Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau and Budget Director Smith yesterday were given a brief insight into the effect on American business of Washington's mass production of forms and questionnaires and, on the basis of what they heard, joined congressional members of the Joint Economy Committee in backing a resolution calling for a special investigation.

The committee, after being told in a public hearing that businessmen spend as much time supervising the filling out of Government forms as they used to spend on running their businesses and that, in one instance, Federal red tape held a vitally-needed drug off the market for six weeks, voted unanimously to report the resolution to the Senate in the hope that business may be "relieved of any needless irritation, labor or expense."

Morgenthau and Smith are members of the committee comprised of Federal executives and legislators of both houses of Congress. Smith voted for the investigation in person. Morgenthau, who listened to most of the testimony, left his proxy with the committtee chairman, Senator Byrd (Democrat) of Virginia.

The striking title of one questionnaire received by a business firm, "1-1071-PLOF-5-NOBU-COS-WP," provided a high spot in the hearing.

In announcing to reporters the committee's decision, reached in an executive session following the hearing, Byrd made public portions of a report from the National Association of Manufacturers on the extent of the paper "snowstorm."

In three months, the report charged, 89 companies received 3479 Federal requests for data on operation of their businesses, prices charged for commodities and costs upon which these prices were based.

The report noted that the average of questionnaire and form receipts by the companies was 164 for each company and went on to declare that, if the intensity and complication of the "paper" output continues as at present, 495,480 man-hours a year would be re-

Main Targets Visible Part of Blackout Time

Street Lights Make Surprise Test Spotty First Nine Minutes

The metropolitan area was blacked out last night for the first time in more than two months, but so hurriedly and with such complete surprise that the area's principal targets remained almost perfectly outlined for 9 of the 25 minutes the test lasted.

Street lights on Taft and Memorial bridges remained burning as did others in the vicinity of the White House, around the Ellipse, in front of the District Building and elsewhere. All burned for at least 9 minutes after the sirens sounded; some were on as long as 11 minutes.

Reaction is Mixed

The yellow signal was flashed at 7:57 p. m.; the blue at 8:14; the sirens went off at 8:24 and the all-clear followed at 8:49.

Reaction to the test's success was mixed.

Commissioner John Russell Young, who had to rout Police Superintendent Edward J. Kelly from bed to accompany him on a tour of inspection, described the blackout as "very effective" barring the street lights.

Chief Air Raid Warden William J. Mileham found it "rather spotty," a fact which he attributed to the failure of many people to hear the alarm.

Ickes to Take Top Labor Job If Chief Insists

But He'd Much Rather Keep Interior Post, He Tells President

Secretary of Interior Harold L. Ickes has told President Roosevelt that he is reluctant to leave the Department of Interior, which he has headed for almost ten years, to accept the dual job of manpower "czar" and Secretary of Labor, but that he is ready to do the bidding of the Commander in Chief, it was learned yesterday.

This response to the President's proposal that Ickes become the Government's top labor official leaves a decision on going ahead with the Presidential plan for a sensational three-way Cabinet shuffle entirely up to Mr. Roosevelt.

Farmers Oppose Draft Shift

A protest against a reported plan to put the Selective Service System under the Labor Department, if Ickes becomes Labor secretary, came last night from the National Grange, the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Council of Farmer Cooperatives and the National Cooperative Milk Producers Federation. Officials of the organization said they had sent a joint telegram to President Roosevelt saying:

"In our opinion this (Selective Service) system should continue as an independent agency, equally responsible to all the people. Farmers are becoming increasingly concerned over the trend toward control of manpower, including those engaged in agriculture, by agencies who are not familiiar with the problems of food and fiber production.

Ickes paid an unheralded visit to the White House yesterday afternoon to confer with the President, it was learned.

Ready, If Chief Insists

It was reported that during this visit Ickes told the President that he would prefer to remain Secretary of Interior with his present duties, but suggested that if it were absolutely necessary to make him manpower "czar," he be given the post without relinquishing the Interior job.

Under Ickes' proposal, the Department of Labor would remain independent of the manpower setup.

However, Ickes made it clear that he was not turning down the President's request and would take the

Food Poisoning Suspected

More Than 50 Ill After Eating At Pentagon; Inquiry Begun

More than 50 persons—both military and civilian personnel—were given emergency treatment at the Pentagon Building late yesterday afternoon and early last night, suffering from what was believed to be food poisoning. Other Pentagon employes were treated at District of Columbia hospitals and Fort Myer infirmary.

Army officials investigating the case had not definitely fixed the blame last night, but said all the stricken who were questioned reported they had eaten corned beef for lunch in a Pentagon Building cafeteria.

None of the cases was considered "dangerous," according to Army spokesmen.

Army and civilian doctors were rushed to the Pentagon Building, where two infirmaries were reported nearly filled with sufferers. An undisclosed number was taken to Walter Reed Hospital after preliminary treatment.

The War Department disclosed that an analysis of the supply of corned beef served at lunch had been ordered as part of the investigation. Assistant Secretary of War John J. McCloy was directing the investigation, supervising the care of those who remained in the building last night, and keeping a lookout for additional cases.

Some of the victims were dis-

20 Shot Down, 30 Destroyed on Ground; Double Drive Continues

Moscow (Wednesday), Dec. 2.—Russian airmen have destroyed 50 big German transport planes trying to supply Nazi troops fighting against a Red Army encirclement in the Stalingrad area and the Soviet armies continue to advance in that sector on the central front west of Moscow, it was announced early today.

The regular noon communique yesterday and the midnight bulletin disclosed that approximately 6000 more Germans had fallen on the snow-covered battlefields in an increasingly stubborn effort to hold up the Red Army.

Twenty of the big trimotored Junkers planes were shot down and 30 were destroyed on the ground on Monday alone as the Germans attempted to bring up supplies and war materials in the area west of Stalingrad, between the Volga and Don Rivers, the midnight bulletin said. Soviet reports on air activities generally are a day late.

The Russians still were reported fighting on the eastern bank of the Don River in their efforts to close a trap on the Germans. Nazi railway communications to the rear already had been snapped by the Russians both northwest and southwest of Stalingrad.

Additional Points Taken

The toll of 5000 German dead yesterday raised the total to 161,700 for both the Stalingrad and central front sectors on the basis of previous special announcements. No special communique was issued last night on the continuing operations.

The Russians said their troops had occupied additional populated points in the Stalingrad area and between Velikie Luki and Rzhev on the central front after "overcoming stubborn enemy resistance." Big stockpiles of equipment and other materials also were captured or destroyed in the methodical Soviet advance, the communique said.

Inside Stalingrad the fighting mostly was confined to artillery duels and consolidation of hard-won Russian positions.

Wild Melee of Maneuver

The Red army continued its offensives on both fronts yesterday and occupied several populated places after "overcoming stubborn enemy resistance," the Russians announced today.

Like the battle of the contracting trap at Stalingrad, the newer offensive in the Rzhev-Vyazma-Veliki Luki triangle became a wild melee of maneuver over frozen streams and soil, but on both fronts the Russians said they were advancing and increasing by the hour the peril to the haggard en-

London, Dec. 1.—An air struggle of an intensity unequaled since the Battle of Britain was raging over Tunisia tonight as Germans and Italians rushed in reinforcements by sea and air in a frantic bid to keep their footholds on the coastal rim and British, Americans and French drove spearheads forward to slice them into at least three pockets.

The Morocco radio said tonight that one of these spearheads, composed of Americans and French, already had driven to the east coast between Gabes and Sfax, cutting out one pocket.

To the north, the Morocco broadcast added, the Allies have driven through enemy minefields and overrun the resistance of German heavy tanks in the drive to divide the Germans in Tunis and Bizerte.

Apparently, the radio continued, the British First Army has now come up "against the nucleus of enemy resistance."

A delayed dispatch from a Reuters correspondent with the British First Army said Medjez el Bab, 30 miles southwest of Tunis, was taken last Friday after a 48-hour hard fight that began on Wednesday, the beginning of the Allied all-out drive against Tunis and Bizerte.

Some Nazi Planes Withdrawn

Lieut. Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower has thrown everything in his aerial armory, from Flying Fortresses to P-38 fighters, in a virtually nonstop assault on Bizerte, Tunis, Sfax and Gabes, the four key coastal points held by the Axis, in the last 24 hours, said dispatches from Allied headquarters in North Africa, where a spokesman described the battle as at a critical stage.

Round-the-clock Allied assaults were reported in some dispatches to have made Axis air bases at Bizerte virtually untenable, with Hitler forced to withdraw some of his planes to operating bases in Sicily.

But the Germans were trying desperately to halt the devastating series of raids, and American airmen flying twin-motored P-38 Lockheed Lightnings encountered Germany's fastest high-altitude fighters, Focke-Wulf 190s and Messerschmitt 109Gs, for the first time over North Africa.

Hitler was bringing in air reserves from western Europe and the Russian front to stem the tide. One German pilot shot down had been flying over Stalingrad less than two weeks ago.

Action to South

The Germans and Italians also were rushing in reinforcements by sea and air for the 20,000 combat troops and thousands of communications and air force men who, authoritative quarters estimated, were already in Tunisia, and were busy trying to consolidate bridgeheads on the east coast at Sfax and Gabes.

The British army, with American armored forces now making up about a fourth of its strength, exerted heavy pressure beyond Djedeida, 12 miles west of Tunis, where a wedge was being driven between Tunis and Bizerte, and at Mateur, 28 miles south of Bizerte, in a direct attack on the naval base.

Farther to the south, where the French under Gen. Henri Giraud and Americans were reported to have driven from central Tunisia to the coast between Gabes and Sfax, Italians were attempting to reorganize new bridgeheads in order to have a place to fight from should they be pushed out of the northern tip of Tunisia.

In the mountains between Djedeida and Mateur there were fre-

The Shape of Things to Come

Revolutionary New Security Plan Envisions A Postwar Britain Free of Financial Want

Sweeping Proposals Would Shelter Workers From Birth to Death

By the Associated Press

London, Dec. 1.—The shape of a postwar Britain freed from want and insecurity by a revolutionary social security plan was laid before the nation today by the Government Planning Committee of Sir William Beveridge.

In many ways, both in the variety of benefits it envisages and the range of population it would shelter from birth to death, it is the outline of the most sweeping plan for Government-sponsored social security ever set forth in Britain.

Issuance of the Beveridge commission report—to which opposition lines were reported forming even before its contents were known—still leaves the plan a blueprint, rather than a reality.

A "British Revolution"

It is but one aspect of a broad tide of new ideas about community responsibility in future planning in Britain, however, and Commons already has been exhorted to give it an early and sympathetic hearing, so that it can be adopted as soon as the war is over.

The 300,000-word report recommended the creation of a new Ministry of Social Security to administer the manifold benefits under the plan and the billions of dollars which the government employers and employes would pool annually for pensions, unemployment and health insurance, death benefits and birth and marriage bounties.

Sir William himself acknowledged that the program was "in some ways a revolution," but he said it was a "British revolution" with the people contributing, by their own preference, to a national insurance fund rather than taking

Powers Bill Foes Unmoved By Peace Step

A House Ways and Means subcommittee unanimously reported a new war powers bill with controversial immigration-law suspension provisions extracted yesterday, but last night the compromise move appeared to have failed to mollify foes of the measure, who predicted that either the legislation would remain dead for this Congress or that public hearings would be held.

The bill which the subcommittee reported to the full Ways and Means Committee for its consideration today was largely similar to a measure approved by the subcommittee several days ago except that it contained no authorization for President Roosevelt to suspend immigration laws as a wartime necessity.

Acting under pressure from the White House, where authority to suspend tariff and immigration laws is viewed as an immediate need, the subcommittee approved a bill to permit the President to

WPB-Military Production Fight Ended

By Ben W. Gilbert

President Roosevelt disclosed last night that the conflict between the military and the War Production Board over control of production scheduling had been settled by negotiation.

Details of the accord were not revealed by the Chief Executive, but it was learned from other sources that a compromise which fully recognizes the authority of WPB to schedule all war production had been reached.

The compromise which is still to be reduced to final written form places Charles E. Wilson, WPB production vice chairman, in complete charge of aircraft production. Under the agreement, Wilson also will retain technical control over scheduling of other production items including tanks, guns, ships, ammunition, etc., but will permit

Ewing Is Denied New Trial; Lindsey Conviction Reversed

Negro Was to Be Executed Jan. 8; New Trial Ordered

Roland J. Lindsey, 21, who was condemned to the electric chair for rape, was granted a new trial yesterday by a 2-to-1 decision of the United States Court of Appeals here.

Lindsey did not take the witness stand to deny the crime, but offered a defense of feeble mindedness and insanity.

The majority justices held that Lindsey's lawyers did not have enough opportunity to cross-examine the Government experts who testified that the Negro youth was not insane when he crept up on a young couple in the Patterson Woods the night of July 19, 1941, beat a soldier unconscious with half a brickbat and ravished his companion.

The girl suffered many cuts and abrasions; the soldier, who was slashed with a razor as well as beaten, was permanently injured. Two detectives said Lindsay confessed when they caught him and the man was sentenced to die on January 8, 1943, more than 18

U. S. Court of Appeals Refuses to Overrule Rape Case Decision

Orman W. Ewing, 55-year-old former Democratic National committeeman from Utah, yesterday lost his fight for a new trial on a charge of raping a 20-year-old Government worker a year ago, when the United States Court of Appeals refused to reverse his District Court conviction.

Found guilty last February, Ewing is under a prison sentence of 8 to 24 years, imposed June 30 by Justice James W. Morris.

Yesterday's opinion was handed down by Chief Justice D. Lawrence Groner and Associate Justices Wiley Rutledge and Henry W. Edgerton.

In upholding the lower court's verdict, the opinion overruled a contention that the girl, who had come here from Ewing's home State, had not been sufficiently borne out in her story of the alleged crime.

Ewing's only defense, the court wrote, was "not that she had consented, but that the entire incident, including the intercourse, never had taken place.

American Submarines Sink Jap Destroyer, 4 Other Ships

By John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

American submarines have sunk five more Japanese ships, including a destroyer, the Navy announced yesterday after Secretary Knox praised the work of the United States Fleet's "silent service."

Two additional enemy vessels were damaged by torpedoes fired by the far-ranging American subs in the western Pacific. One of these—a 12,000-ton cargo ship—was probably sunk, the Navy said.

Knox commented on the exploits of the Pacific Fleet submarines following the publication of a story from Hawaii of the sinking of 70,000 tons of Jap ships by one submersible commanded by Lieut. Comdr. Thomas B. Klakring of Annapolis.

Klakring took his boat into Japan's coastal waters in sinking eight and damaging four enemy craft. The daring commander and his crew entered small harbors after their prey and once watched a pony race on shore for an hour.

Rarely has the Navy released any detailed account of the cruises of its heroic submarine service. News stories telling the time and place of their attacks might tell

Britain Moves To Avert Want After the War

Not all of the cost would be new, Beveridge said it would be a substitution, in large part, of a conscious security payment for an unconscious tribute to unemployment and disability.

In the first year, the new program would cost about $2,780,000,000, of which the government would provide $1,404,000,000, employers, 548 million dollars, and insured persons, 776 million dollars.

After 20 years, when the plan was in high gear, it would cost an additional 644 million dollars annually, but both employes and workers would contribute slightly less and the Government would make up the difference.

Virtually All Workers Covered

Virtually all workers would be covered in the plan, including agricultural, civil service, bank, insurance, railroad and nonmanual workers earning more than $1680, who are exempt under the present insurance system.

It would equalize unemployment and disability benefits, except for industrial ailment, where it is recognized that workers are in hazardous ocupations and deserve more when stricken.

It would raise the industrial disability benefit rate to a scale comparable with that in the United States.

It would alter the system of compulsory health insurance, now under private companies paying varying benefits, so that all who paid the same would receive the same.

These are some of the principal benefits under the program:

Old age pnsions—double the present, from $4 to $8 a week for a typical man and wife.

Marriage payments—up to $40 to working women upon marrying to compensate for their changed benefit status.

Health insurance—extend limited medical service to comprehensive medical care for every member of workers' families.

In a typical family of four, an ailing or unemployed father would get $11.20 a week indefinitely, instead of the brief period of payments ranging down to $1.50, which were in force before the war began.

The increased pensions still would average less than in the United States but would be distributed more broadly and there are phases of the plan—such as the health insurance, marriage, maternity and funeral grants—for which there are no counterparts in the United States.

In the United States, social security payments are based on the individual's wages and the length of time he contributes. Here they would be unvarying payments.

Probably the most controversial recommendation in the report—one on which opposition began crystallizing beforehand—was the proposal to take over the work of private weekly-collection industrial insurance companies whose operating costs the commission regarded as unduly high.

Another was the proposal that workmen's compensation—a state matter in the United States but handled here between individual employers and their workers—be nationalized with central fund to which all employers and employes, would contribute.

It urged recognition of housewives as career women in a separate insurance category with a carefully devised benefit program "putting a premium on marriage instead of penalizing it."

Where workmen now contribute 20 to 55 cents a week to unemployment and health insurance and pension funds through a complicated plan of cards and stamps, they would make one weekly contribution for all. It would range from 30 cents for unemployed 16-year-olds to 85 cents for employed workers over 20. Employers' contributions would range from 40 to 65 cents for each worker.

Increases Are Provided

A sample family of four, for instance, would have these increases in security:

Unemployment insurance—
Old—For 26 weeks	$7.60
New—Indefinitely	11.20
Nonindustrial disability—
Old—For 26 weeks	3.60
New—Indefinitely	11.20
Old-age pension—
Old—A week	4.00
New—A week	8.00
Marriage (for working women)—
Old	None
New—Up to	40.00
Funeral Allowance—
Old	None
New—For infants	24.00
New—For adults	80.00
Industrial—
Old—Half-pay up to	7.00
New—For 13 weeks	11.20
Disability—
Old—For 2 children, weekly plus	1.60
New—Two-thirds pay up to	15.20

The funeral grant was designed to replace voluntary, private industrial insurance under which virtually everyone in Britain is covered, but, according to the report, "at excessive expense."

Hope to Boost Birth Rate

Beveridge said the increased allowances for maternity and children were in the hope of stemming Britain's falling birth rate under which the population is not reproducing its own numbers.

Britain, which led the industrial revolution, and has strong labor unions, has had workmen's compensation since 1906, compulsory health insurance since 1912, unemployment insurance since 1920 and old-age pensions since 1925.

But they have been separately managed by scattered agencies ranging from private insurance companies to county sheriffs.

The Beveridge committee included 12 representatives of government departments and branches—among whom were three women—appointed in June, 1941, to devise its now-submitted plan for integrating the tangle of services and to improve the social security setup in keeping with the new ideas which have been sweeping England concerning social responsibility after the war.

Even before its plan was made public, the committee had stirred wider public interest, speculation and controversy probably than any domestic topic since 1939.

Insurance Companies Uneasy

The conservative "1922 committee" was reported already organizing opposition to the proposed greatly increased government expenditure and collectors for industrial insurance companies, whose business is threatened, already have cited the possible policy loss to workingmen subscribers, even though the project still is in the planning stage.

The report now goes before Parliament for action, which Beveridge urged be started immediately, so the program would be ready for inauguration right after the war.

Britain's provision for need in industrial communities already is "on a scale unsurpassed everywhere," Beveridge said, except on points of medical service and workmen's compensation.

"Want could have been abolished in Britain just before the present war," he added. "It can be abolished after the war . . . The proposals cover the ground which must be covered, one way or another, in translating the words of the Atlantic Charter into deeds."

He argued that "abolition of want requires a better distribution of wealth"—not among capital, labor and management but among the workers themselves—"as between times of earning and not earning and times of heavy family responsibilities and times of light or no family responsibilities . . . unemployment and disability already are being paid for unconsciously It is no addition to the burden on the community to provide for them consciously."

In view of the issues of high policy involved, the report was signed only by Beveridge, a lean, sprightly man who, at 63, has just announced his intention to marry his World War secretary, Mrs. Jessie Mair, herself a noted economist.

Beveridge himself took pains to emphasize the difference betwene his proposed plan for Britain and the Communist plan for Russia. He pointed out:

1. The British program calls for the beneficiaries to contribute; in Russia the state pays everything.

2. Britain's plan is based on flat rate benefits; Russia's is scaled to individual earnings.

3. In Britain, there would be comprehensive unemployment insurance; Russia has no unemployment.

Nimitz Confident Of Victory Despite Difficulties Ahead

Pearl Harbor, T. H., Dec. 1 (AP).—The job ahead for the Navy in the Pacific will mount in difficulty as it "moves forward into areas more strongly held by the enemy," Adm. Chester W. Nimitz said today, but "our efforts in the past year have inspired the entire fleet with a dauntless spirit which gives me full confidence in ultimate victory."

The commander in chief of the Pacific fleet spoke at a presentation of medals to 21 officers and men at the submarine base.

"It is a pleasure to present awards to this particular group as the first year of the war comes to a close," he said. "Submarines and air units have been the spearheads of our early efforts.

"We in the Pacific fleet were greatly cheered by the successes of our submarines in destroying enemy shipping, much of it within sight of his principal harbors. Similarly, the courage and tireless devotion of the air arm has been a powerful stimulus to the fleet."

Farm Labor Plan for 1943 Is Promised

War Manpower Director Paul V. McNutt disclosed last night that labor for the unprecented food production drive in 1943 will be supplied by a highly mobile army of experienced farm hands, aided by local volunteers for peak-season requirements.

He said the six-point program will be worked out in detail by WMC and the Agriculture Department during the winter months "and launched as soon as spring plantings begin."

Warning that next year's farm-labor problem would be critical, he said the program would work if all parties "abandon special interests and concentrate on getting the necessary crops in." If it fails, something else will have to be tried, he said, adding:

"Farmers may be certain that the Government will take whatever steps are necessary to assure enough labor for 1943's record agricultural goals."

The program calls for:

Full time continuous employment of groups of experienced farm workers who would be transported at Government expense from one area to another as crops mature.

Relaxation of State barriers restricting the "complete mobility of labor" between States.

Transfer of experienced farm operators and hands now on substandard lands to productive areas where labor is needed.

Expansion of the United States Employment Service's farm placement machinery to direct the farm labor movement and attain "full-scale mobilization" of local volunteer group.

Adjustment of farm wages to bring incomes more nearly in line with those of industrial workers.

Lehman Leaves N. Y. With Surplus Of $75,000,000

Albany, N. Y., Dec. 1 (INS).—Gov. Herbert H. Lehman, who will resign tomorrow to become United States director of foreign relief and rehabilitation, reported tonight that the State is headed toward a surplus of 75 million dollars.

"I'm happy to report," the Governor said in a radio address, "that when Governor Dewey takes office on January 1, he will find the State in excellent condition."

When Lehman took office 10 years ago, he inherited a deficit of nearly 100 million dollars. This has been changed into a huge surplus, despite expenditure of 700 million dollars for relief during the depression, and tax reductions this year and last totaling 90 million dollars.

After the Governor leaves office at 3:59 p. m. tomorrow, Lieut. Gov. Charles Poletti will be sworn in as the State's Forty-sixth Governor. Poletti will serve until Dewey takes over January 1.

Street Lights Mar Blackout

if permissible—could have been undertaken only at dire peril.

Last night's test was the eleventh blackout for the District. Five daylight tests have been held.

Motorcycle Rider Injured

Hugh Hansen, 25, 1721 Riggs Place Northwest, a volunteer OCD messager, suffered head injuries when the motorcycle he was riding during the blackout struck a streetcar loading platform on Connecticut Avenue near Q Street Northwest. He was removed to Emergency Hospital.

The test was not without its lighter side.

Artur Rubinstein, concert pianist, and Jan Ciechanowski, Ambassador of Poland, were en route to Constitution Hall where the former was to appear with the Philadelphia Orchestra, when the siren sounded as they reached Nineteenth and D Streets. "We got out of our car and proceeded the remaining few yards, stepping into puddles all the way," the envoy related afterward.

Patrons en route to the hall either continued on, under the guidance of police, or were ushered into the Interior Department Building. More than 100 persons remained outside the hall throughout the test, but patrons with tickets were passed inside.

An air-raid warden, trying to arouse someone in Raleigh Haberdasher, 1310 F Street Northwest, where a light was burning, accidentally kicked off a burglar alarm and sent police cars rushing to the scene.

Conrad Van Hyning, director of Civilian War Assistance, was all set to tell District members of the American Association of Social Workers at the National Catholic School of Social Service what people should do in time of an air raid when the sirens sounded. The meeting adjourned to the library, where blackout facilities were available.

Not so funny to the parties involved was an incident which occurred at 1762 North Troy Street, Clarendon, where the stork hovered during the blackout. D. G. Dumm, jr., afraid that he would not be able to drive his wife to Georgetown Hospital, called an ambulance from Clarendon Fire Company No. 4. It arrived as the all-clear sounded.

Some of the more evident violations occurred at the Municipal Center where a number of lights burned throughout the blackout in offices occupied by the War Production Board. There were other isolated instances of single lights burning—but the chief offender appeared to be the recalcitrant street lights.

Commissioner Young praised the behavior of pedestrians in getting off the streets and emphasized the fact that there had been no leaks to indicate the time of the test. With his executive assistant, Col. Lemuel Bolles, Young watched the staff at the No. 2 control center in the Thirteenth Precinct go to work. No one was on duty when the yellow signal flashed, but before the red signal came through a full staff of 36 persons was at work.

Chief Mileham said the test demonstrated the "absolute need" of approved, official blackout equipment and insignia for cars. Some citizens, he said, could see no sense in dousing the lights on their cars when others remained lighted. They have no way of knowing, he said, that these cars are on official business.

Montgomery County reported "fine cooperation" in that area and said a few scattered lights burning there after the alarm sounded were due to the failure of householders to hear the alarm. Eighteen young ladies who have been studying control center operations were due to take another course of the county center last night. They arrived just in time—not to study, but to go to work.

New England Group Probes Fuel Oil Ration

A seven-member committee of New England Senators and Congressmen was appointed yesterday to investigate fuel oil allocations in the Northeastern States and obtain "something more than promises" to alleviate the situation.

Committee members—five Republicans and two Democrats—were named at an "indignation" meeting of a bi-partisan New England congressional delegation which heard charges that tank cars had been diverted to other sections of the country and complaints that ration boards had cut allotments too drastically.

The meeting was held at request of House Republican Leader Joseph Martin of Massachusetts who said "New England is seriously threatened with an epidemic unless we get this fuel oil."

Suspected Murderer Taken in Texas

Laredo, Tex., Dec. 1 (AP).—Laredo police announced today the arrest of Wayne Edward Banning, 30, charged with murder in the November 19 slaying of Mrs. Doris Munt of Windsor, Ontario, whose beaten body was found in Lincoln Park, a Detroit suburb.

He was arrested at the International Bridge while heading for Mexico. Detroit police said they found blood-stained clothing and Mrs. Munt's fur coat in Banning's apartment.

"It's good to have you home for Christmas, son"

This Christmas is going to be brighter for thousands of mothers because their sons in the service came home for the holidays.

Other mothers will be traveling by train to visit their boys in camp.

Soldiers, sailors, marines . . . parents, wives, sweethearts . . . all must use our regular trains . . . for Uncle Sam says, holiday or no holiday, we can't run extra trains or sections for civilian travel. That means crowded trains, at best.

So . . . before you plan to travel by train during the holidays, ask yourself this question: "Which is most important, my trip or theirs?"

If your answer is "theirs, of course" . . . and if your postpone your trip, you will know that you have helped someone to say: "It's good to have you home for Christmas, son."

Canada, U. S. Reach Accord on Economic Principles for Postwar Period

Pledge Calls For Lowering Trade Barriers

Canada and the United States last night announced an agreement looking toward a post-war world in which trade barriers would be lowered and the production, exchange and consumption of goods greatly enlarged for the "satisfaction of human needs."

The agreement, embodied in an exchange of notes made public by the State Department, sets forth the principles which will guide the governments of the two countries in approaching the problem of economic settlements after the war.

In language similar to that employed in the lend-lease agreements between the United States and Britain, China, Russia and other countries, the two governments formally agreed that postwar settlements must be of a sort to promote mutually advantageous economic relations between them as well as the betterment of worldwide economic relations.

Incorporates Lend-Lease

Indicating the objectives of such postwar settlements the exchange of notes incorporates the aims set forth in Article VI of the lend-lease agreements—that is:

"To provide appropriate national and international measures to expand production, employment and the exchange and consumption of goods, which are the material foundations of the liberty and welfare of all peoples; to eliminate all forms of discriminatory treatment in international commerce; to reduce tariffs and other trade barriers; and, generally, to attain the economic objectives of the Atlantic charter."

With these aims in mind, a State department announcement explained, the governments of the United States and Canada will soon begin conversations, between themselves and with representatives of other United Nations, "with a view to establishing now the foundations upon which we may create after the war a system of enlarged production, exchange, and consumption of goods for the satisfaction of human needs in our country, in Canada, and in all other countries which are willing to join in this great effort."

To Show the World

In these conversations, the announcement continues, "an effort will be made to furnish the world with a concrete example of how two friendly economically interdependent countries, convinced that reciprocally beneficial relations of the sort prevailing between them must form part of a general system, may promote by agreed action their mutual interests to the benefit of themselves and other countries."

The exchange of notes has the effect of enrolling Canada—which has no lend-lease agreement with the United States—among the nations pledged to further the postwar aims embodied in the lend-lease agreements.

Norwegian Ship Sunk in Caribbean, 44 Survivors Safe

The Navy announced last night that survivors have been landed at a United States East Coast port from a medium-sized Norwegian merchant vessel which was torpedoed and sunk by an enemy submarine in the Caribbean area early in November.

Fourty-four of the 45-man crew abandoned ship shortly after the torpedo struck. A gunner, standing by at his station in a pillbox aft, was killed. An hour later Allied vessels picked up the survivors and an Allied warship sank the burning ship, which was menacing other shipping in the area.

Clark Decorated for Handling Of Pre-Invasion Secret Task

"... THINKING OF HIM"—Ann Clark, 16-year-old daughter of Lieut. Gen. Mark W. Clark, said she "must have been thinking of him" when she finished the larger white figure at left in her sculpture class at Wilson High School. It fairly resembles her father and now she's really trying to catch his features and holds the half-completed new figure. Gen. Clark led a secret mission to North Africa to pave the way for Allied landings.

By Wes Gallagher
Associated Press Staff Writer

Allied Headquarters in North Africa, Dec. 1.—Lieut. Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower today personally decorated Lieut. Gen. Mark W. Clark with the Distinguished Service Medal for his "outstanding characteristics of leadership, sound judgment, and soldierly qualities" in carrying out a hazardous secret mission to Africa before the Allied invasion.

Eisenhower, a West Point companion of Clark, decorated the tall, youngest lieutenant general in the United States Army in a simple ceremony.

Clark was flanked by the greatest collection of top-ranking generals and gold braid thus far assembled at headquarters here—and by Negro Sergt. William Chaney of Washington, D. C.

Chaney was the proudest man in the American Army here today, for he has been Clark's orderly for many years. He stood with Admiral Sir Andrew Browne Cunningham of the British Navy, Maj. Gen. James H. Doolittle, and a dozen other British and American generals while his chief was decorated.

The citation said:

"General Clark, as Deputy Commander in Chief of the Allied North African Force, rendered distinguished service to the United States Army in connection with planning the organization for operations in Africa.

"As deputy commander he carried out a vitally important and hazardous mission to Algiers by submarine, and conducted it with conspicuous success important to negotiations with the French official staff. In all these duties he displayed outstanding characteristics of leadership, sound judgment, and soldierly qualities to honor the Army of the United States."

Japanese Send 4 Destroyers To New Guinea

By the Associated Press

Allied Headquarters in Australia (Wednesday), Dec. 2.—Despite their heavy losses in previous abortive attempts to reinforce their isolated troops in the Buna-Gona area of New Guinea, the Japanese sent four destroyers toward Buna today in another attempt to strengthen their forces.

Allied planes scored hits and near misses on some of the ships, but there was no report whether this latest attempt at reinforcement had been turned back, a spokesman for Gen. Douglas MacArthur said.

With MacArthur's air force smashing repeatedly at Japanese positions, especially in the vicinity of Buna, American and Australian ground forces were slowly contracting their grip on the enemy, according to the Allied communique.

Wave after wave of Allied planes—Airacobra fighters, B-26 and B-25 medium bombers and A-20 attack bombers—hammered the Japanese lines and started fires in the vicinity of Buna mission.

The Japanese sent fighters and dive-bombers to strafe the Allied-held air strip near the northern coast, but two fighters and one dive-bomber were shot down.

3 Killed in Crash Of Army Plane

Eglin Field, Fla., Dec. 1 (AP).—The crash of an Army plane with the death of its three occupants was announced by Eglin Field headquarters today. The dead were listed as First Lieut. Duncan C. Murphy, pilot, of St. Petersburg, Fla.; Second Lieut. Albert J. Wieland, copilot, of Norton, Kans., and Sergt. Herbert C. Wade of Big Stone Gap, Va.

Chinese Expect Great New Jap Blow at Yunnan Sector

By the Associated Press

Chungking, Dec. 1.—More than ten Japanese divisions are stationed in territories about Yunnan Province for a possible campaign to close this "backdoor" of China, an Army spokesman disclosed today.

The spokesman told a press conference that Gen. Count Juichi Terauchi, commanding Japanese forces in the Pacific theater of war, had extended his mid-November inspection of troops in northern Burma to include a visit across the Yunnan frontier to Lungling, Burma Road town which the Chinese lost last May.

Estimating the Japanese strength available for a Yunnan attack at about 210,000 men, the spokesman said Terauchi "apparently had in mind some possible move against our forces," for the visit of a high-ranking Japanese officer any place was usually the prelude to action.

Of the six Japanese divisions reported previously in Burma, one had been transferred to western Yunnan, the nearest point from which a drive could be started against the provincial capital, Kunming, the spokesman revealed. Other divisions were stationed in Indo-China and Thailand, within relatively close range of Yunnan.

The spokesman also said the Japanese were transporting supplies to the Burmese port, Akyab, near the Indian frontier, "for use against India, if there's an opportunity."

(Akyab, since the fall of Burma, has been held by a Japanese garrison which British military observers estimated at 1200 men. During the monsoon season, recently ended, the garrison was cut off much of the time by storms and floods from inland supply bases.)

The Chinese high command claimed a further success today in fighting on the China coast. A communique said Chinese troops had attacked Japanese positions near the vital port, Swatow, and disrupted communications along the railway from Swatow to Chaoan. In the action, which occurred November 20, casualties were reported inflicted on the enemy and considerable booty was captured.

G. A. R. Veteran, 96, Takes Bride Today

Chippewa Falls, Wis., Dec. 1 (AP).—Leslie A. Wilcox, 96-year-old Civil War veteran who walks 4 to 6 miles a day to keep in shape, will taken another walk tomorrow—down an aisle to take himself a bride.

Wilcox, a retired farmer who is active despite his age, hopes to be the "last member of the G. A. R. to marry" when he weds Mrs. Marie Buttke, 65. It will be the fourth marriage for Wilcox and the second for Mrs. Buttke.

Jewry Joins in Day of Mourning

American Jewry will be joined today by Jewish communities in 29 countries in a day of mourning in response to a call by the World Zionist Organization and the World Jewish Congress.

Directing attention to the "ghastly and horrible plan of wholesale and systematic slaughter that is being carried out by the Nazi overlords against Jewish communities," Judge Louis E. Levinthal, president of the Zionist Organization of America, called for concerted action to stir the free world to save European Jewry from "large scale massacres" surpassing the Middle Ages.

"To consecrate all that we have to the service of the United Nations in order that the day of victory may be hastened and with it justice and abiding peace," he said, the day of mourning has been set aside.

166 Allied Ships Sunk, Say Nazis

Berlin (From German Broadcasts), Dec. 1 (AP).—The German high command issued a special announcement today asserting that German sea and air forces during November sank 166 ships totaling 1,035,200 tons.

(There was no confirmation of this enemy claim. Similar announcements in the past have proved to be highly exaggerated.)

quired to handle it.

Sixty-four per cent of the forms and questionnaires covered by the NAM report were duplicating, in some degree, and 34 per cent were "entirely duplicate," Byrd disclosed, leaving only 2 per cent that were found not to be duplicating "at all." The association, the Senator reported, found 43 per cent of the reports studied to be "unnecessary."

Most Came From OPA

Most of the forms and questionnaires cited by protesting representatives of the drug and construction industries were distributed by the Office of Price Administration, and Byrd, in disclosing that the committee would next call in Federal officials for examination, singled out the name of Price Administrator Leon Henderson for mention.

Henderson, already under fire in Congress, is likely to be one of the first witnesses called when the committee, as scheduled, starts to find out "what happens" to all the reports the Government is collecting. Byrd said he believed that many of them were stuck away in "pigeonholes" and forgotten.

An early call for Transportation Director Joseph B. Eastman also was indicated. Byrd flourished before the committee a 24,000-word pamphlet issued by Eastman's Office of Defense Transportation for "certificates of war necessity," the documents by which ODT intends to ration commercial vehicle operation. The instructions were sent out to 4,895,000 truck operators, the great majority of whom, observed Byrd, are farmers who are not disposed to read 24,000 words of instruction.

Avid Commissars' Assailed

Senator Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan, cosponsor with Byrd of the investigation resolution, assailed what he called "avid commissars" and told the committee that the "bureaucrats are running wild . . . flooding the country with ponderous questionnaires which not noly demand a toll of information which it is impossible for the average businessman or the average citizen to answer, but which also strike positive terror into the hearts of citizens who wish to be totally loyal, yet who find their loyalties channeled into maddening inquisitions."

C. M. Van Kirk, vice president of E. R. Squibb & Sons, drug concern, charged OPA delays with imperiling the lives of infants sick with whooping cough. Recently, he recounted, the firm developed a new antipertussis (whooping cough) serum, but was unable to put it on the market until OPA had agreed on the price to be charged for it.

After six weeks of phone calls to OPA in an effort to reach an agreement upon the price, Van Kirk said he called the OPA official responsible and, he testified:

"I told him that if no authorization (for sale of the product) were forthcoming in the next 48 hours, I thought I could prove that infants had died whlie you fellows have been pussyfooting around with this.

Got Action Next Day

"The product was released the next day."

VanKirk exhibited to the committee two OPA forms which, he said, were identified by the following code numbers: "One- 1071- PLOF- 5- NOBU- COS-WP" and "OPA- Q- 51- OA- STO39-42."

Every time his company makes an alteration in one of its products, Van Kirk testified, OPA requires it to file a new form. Between 600 and 800 product changes have been made since last March, he continued.

Several forms, he related, had to be used by his company to give OPA all information it wanted on 26 prices, and when all of the sheets of paper were spread out they would measure 4 by 20 feet. This form was received by the Squibb company, on November 3, he said, with the request that it be filled out and returned by November 7.

Van Kirk estimated that it cost his company $100,000 a year to fill out Government forms.

absolute conformity with the building rules."

5. A Boston Fire Department inquest heard for the first time a statement that a sailor had unscrewed an electric light bulb in the basement Melody Lounge of the club, where the fire started, so that he could "mug his girl."

6. Stanley Tomaszewski, 16-year-old bar boy, who lighted a match to replace the bulb and thus started the conflagration, was held under custody in a Boston hotel, so that, Police Commissioner Joseph Timilty said, he could be "protected from having his story tampered with, to save the civil rights of the dead people."

7. James Welansky, acting manager of the club and brother of one of the principal owners, told the fire department inquest that they had kept fireproofed the things that needed such attention. In response to a question from Fire Commissioner William A. Reilly, as to whether the decorations were fireproof, he said: "They generally fireproof these things," but added he was merely giving "supposition."

The first witness before the inquest was Maurice Levy of Boston. He had lost his wife in the fire. Unshaven and drawn, he testified that a man at the next table to his was "bothered" by a light in the ceiling and had unscrewed the bulb.

Levy said the bar boy had lighted a match to replace it and this had ignited a paper palm tree. The flames leaped to the ceiling decorations, which he said "looked like gauze." So swiftly did the flames move, he said, that they were 10 feet behind him when he and his wife raced for the stairs, but were "10 feet ahead of us" before they started to leave the basement.

He testified the club was "packed," and in response to a question said it was "overcrowded."

Witness after witness described the horror.

Levy said a door to the street was on his right when he and his wife reached the top of the stairs, but that the panic-stricken crowd was surging to the left toward the ballroom. He saw a screaming woman with her hair burned off. His wife was pulled from his side. The man behind him as he went out the door, he said, was "all in flames and he did not get out."

Welanski was questioned at length by Commissioner Reilly, and testified he had been pushed outside.

Q.—"What did you do when you got outside?"

A.—"I went yelling for the fire engine. When I got back—I don't know how long it was because every minute was hours—the glass windows on the Broadway side were broken, and I saw someone impaled on the glass that was broken."

WPB-Military Conflict Ended

the armed services to schedule them under his supervision.

The current conflict between the military and the WPB started when Nelson informed the services that he planned to revoke their authority to schedule war production, and give it to Wilson, former head of the General Electric Co., and one of the country's acknowledged production geniuses.

As a result of the agreement, Nelson technically won back control over scheduling. In actual practice, however, the armed services will be allowed to retain most scheduling as long as they do a good job of it.

In effect, Wilson will schedule aircraft production which has been scheduled poorly up to now and allow the military to continue scheduling other production which by and large, has been scheduled well. From now on, however, service schedules will be subject to rigid review by Wilson.

Scheduling of production—the setting of specific time limits in which specific items or components may be produced—will become more important as United Nations offensive operations increase. The changing demands of war will require the making of rapid changes in production programs. Wilson will have the job of seeing that needed changes are made on schedule.

President Roosevelt endeavored to minimize the seriousness of the conflict between the military and the War Production Board, but added that it really was a big story in one sense that the conflict was settled without slowing up war production.

He stated that an effort ought to be made to overcome the false impression some people were trying to raise that the conflict was a star of first magnitude. Evidently, the President was endeavoring to refute reports that the conflict was part of an attempt by the military to seize control of the country's economy.

The President denied that he was contemplating the issuance of a directive drawing a line between the military and the War Production Board.

Producers To Ask Higher Milk Prices

Increased milk prices will be sought by the Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers' Association as a means of halting the relentless decline in milk supplies available here, it was announced yesterday.

With production in the Washington milkshed steadily dropping—and the availability of outside supplies reduced from 120,000 to about 23,000 quarts per day—B. B. Derrick, manager of the producers' group, said higher cash returns to producers, enabling them to meet the competition for labor, alone held hope of solving a shortage which is fast becoming critical.

To Appeal to Wickard

Accordingly, directors of the association have authorized a petition to Agriculture Secretary Claude Wickard for an increase to producers of 2 cents per quart and for a public hearing "as soon as possible for the purpose of hearing evidence relative to the need for a price boost to dairy farmers."

The increase would apply on all milk used by distributors for fluid milk and milk drinks. On milk used as fluid cream, the association proposed a fluctuating price based on the competitive prices of imported cream.

It is not clear whether distributors would be willing to absorb the proposed increase or pass it along to consumers, the OPA permitting. Executives of the larger dairies could not be reached for comment, but it was known that the industry last May absorbed an increase of 37 cents per hundredweight when the Office of Price Administration froze retail milk prices at March levels.

Should the Department of Agriculture revise its Federal marketing order to permit the price increase, it still would be necessary to obtain the approval of both the OPA and Economic Czar James Byrnes' office to make it effective, assuming that higher retail prices result.

If Any Survive

"Then, if any farmers are alive by that time," said Derrick, "they may be able to get and keep the help they need to maintain milk production.

"The situation in a nutshell," he continued, "is that unless farmers get a substantial increases in price, Washington consumers are not going to have enough fluid milk to meet their most minimum wants. Moreover, this situation is not confined to Washington, but is Nationwide and is the result of the dairy farmers' inability to pay the wages necessary to keep help on the farm and to meet the many other increases in the cost of producing milk."

Recent extension of the Washington milkshed, Derrick said, did not accomplish its purpose. As one illustration of the tangled milk situation, he said the association yesterday had one tank car and three loads of cream cans in Wisconsin and "the chances are that they will come back to us empty."

To meet the demands for all milk products, Washington needs about 132,000 gallons daily. As of yesterday, it was getting 100,000 gallons.

Needs 132,000 Gallons Daily

"Officials in the Federal Government have a decision to make," Derrick said. "They must decide whether to increase prices to dairy farmers to enable them to maintain their production, or let production keep on shrinking and thus create a dangerous shortage of dairy products for ourselves and our Allies.

"The dairy farmer and his representatives can no longer accept the responsibility of feeding this and other nations unless the price is high enough to pay the labor and buy the feed necessary for production."

Darlan Assumes Chief of State Role in Africa

London, Dec. 1 (AP).—Admiral Jean Darlan, acting with the assertion that Marshal Petain is a prisoner of the Germans at Vichy, has taken over authority as chief of state in French Africa, it was announced tonight from Morocco.

The Morocco radio said Darlan had set up an imperial council to advise him. This was announced after Darlan had conferred with Gen. Auguste Nogues and Pierre Boisson, governors general in Morocco and French West Africa, which embraces Dakar.

Fighting French quarters in London, who still regard Darlan as a traitor to France because of his Vichy record, said they assumed it was Darlan's intention to set up a full-fledged French government in North and West Africa.

Still 'Kicking and Screaming,' Midwest Goes Under Gas Rationing

Kansas City, Dec. 1—(AP).—Three little words—"fill 'er up"—disappeared from the national language today as the west, still kicking and screaming, joined the east in gasoline rationing.

They'll probably be replaced by "gimme four" since four gallons likely will be the average purchase of the average motorist who'll part with his ration coupons with all the reluctance of the Russians giving up streets in Stalingrad.

Unlike the east, which was forced into gas rationing months ago by a shortage, the oil producing west started off with car tanks full, not to mention a jug and a few beer bottles filled and tucked away in the garage—just for an emergency.

For instance, there was the motorist at Dallas, Tex., who rolled up to a filling station and said, "Fill 'er up—easy." The pump hand stopped on three pennies' worth.

Most filling station operators were busy right up to closing time last night.

In St. Louis automobile traffic fell off sharply the first day of rationing, but in Kansas City the decrease was slight. The Kansas City Transportation Co. had all its buses and street cars ready for service, but the rush wasn't as great as anticipated.

However, traffic officials said that as the gasoline guage pointers in automobiles neared zero the traffic flow would diminish.

The Southwest, where derricks rise in forests, hasn't yet entirely accepted rationing as final.

At Austin, Tex., Gov. Coke Stevenson, who has opposed the move from the start, declared it wasn't yet too late to fight it and said "now is the time for Congress to assert itself." Protests reaching him by mail, he said, reached a new high today.

Truckers still are complaining, however, many contending they have not been allowed enough mileage fuel for essential needs.

Albuquerque, N. Mex., nearly had a riot among the more than 2000 persons jammed before the ration board office trying to get basic or supplemental ration books. Late comers tried to start a new line, tempers flared and police were called.

The day was not without its little tragedies.

George D. Surprise, Kansas City, filled his tank cram full last night and went happily to bed. Today he discovered the tank had sprung a leak and every drop of gasoline had trickled out.

At Phoenix, J. W. Sissons reported at five minutes after midnight that thieves had taken a half filled 50-gallon drum from his premises.

Dry States such as Kansas and Oklahoma braced themselves for real "bone dry" prohibition. Prices soared to $4 and $5 a pint in the interior as gas rationing was added as another handicap for bootleggers.

And so gasoline rationing came to the West.

Gas Thieves Rouled

Idabel, Okla., Dec. 1 (INS).—Thieves attempting to steal gasoline from tank cars on the first day of gasoline rationing were frightened away, leaving the tank valves open with a consequent loss of 15,000 gallons of the precious fluid.

Gas Blast Injures 4

Denver, Colo., Dec. 1 (INS).—Four persons, including two children, suffered serious burns here today when a supply of hoarded gasoline, stored in a washing machine, exploded.

At Tulsa, Okla., a salesman was fined $8 for storing 87 gallons of gasoline in his garage, in violation of a city ordinance.

Strikers Defy Union

Kansas City, Dec. 1 (INS).—Striking bus drivers tonight defied their union officials who ordered them to return to their jobs, leaving a number of Kansas City's suburban areas without bus transportation, and stranding hundreds of suburbanites who left their automobiles in their garages today, the first day of gas rationing.

Texas Board Trusting

Dallas, Tex., Dec. 1 (INS).—One rationing board in Texas, where gasoline rationing has found little favor, announced it had granted all applications for supplemental rations, explaining "if the people can't be trusted to conserve their own property then our entire structure of democracy is a failure."

Chicago Traffic Ebbs

Chicago, Dec. 1 (INS).—Chicago traffic policemen and parking lot operators estimated that at least 60 per cent of the cars that usually come to the downtown district were missing today, under gasoline rationing. A check of the city parking lot in Grant Park verified the estimate. There were but 200 cars in the lot at an hour when in pre-rationing times there would be 600.

Chicago's streetcars, buses, elevated trains and suburban trains were jammed. Staggered work hours which went into effect Tuesday helped the situation somewhat.

The six cafeterias and four food bars in the Pentagon Building have been the subject of a jurisdictional fight between the Army and the Federal Works Agency.

The FWA claimed that commitments had been made to have the restaurants operated by the Welfare and Recreational Association and that the Army had let a contract to a private firm. The Army settled the fight by taking charge of the restaurants on an "at-cost" basis, but they still are operated by W. P. McFarland, who originally held the contract.

SHARE THE MEAT

Spread your share of meat over the week—Make the most of it nutritionally

FOR A FAMILY OF FOUR
(As available)
Typical week's supply of restricted meats for family of 4, based on 2½ lbs. per week per adolescent or adult.
PLUS NONRESTRICTED MEATS:
(As available)
Oxtails, bacon squares, tongue, pork feet, liver sausage and the Variety Meats—liver, sweetbreads, kidneys, brains, tripe and hearts; also poultry and fish.

Meats shown—(left to right)—Shoulder lamb roast (2 lbs.); beef pot roast (2½ lbs.); pork tenderloin (1¼ lbs.); sliced bacon (½ lb.); lamb stew (1½ lbs.); veal chops (1 lb.); ground beef (1¼ lbs.). Your meat-man can suggest other assortments of available meats.

Only a strong people under the best of nutritive conditions can win the war and rebuild a war-torn world.

For good nutrition it universally is recognized that meat should be eaten at least once a day.

Meat is man's outstanding protein food. In addition to its complete high-quality proteins, meat supplies valuable amounts of the B vitamins—thiamine, riboflavin and niacin—as well as the necessary minerals, iron, copper and phosphorus.

To make sure that our fighters and our allies get the meat they must have, the government is asking civilians to limit their meat consumption voluntarily to 2½ lbs. per week for each adult or child over 12; 1½ lbs. for each child of 6 to 12; ¾ lb. for each child under 6 years of age.

You have a moral contract with 128 million other Americans not in uniform to give them an equal chance at the available meat supply.

Here are simple ways to stay within your allotment and still keep the good nutrition and good flavor of "meat on the table."

1. "Manage your meat." Distribute it over the week. Your meat-man will help you plan meat and sausage selections.
2. Learn more cuts of meat—learn to make delicious dishes out of available cuts, even if you haven't served them before.
3. Use more nonrestricted meats (as available) including the Variety Meats—liver, sweetbreads, kidneys, brains, tripe and hearts. Learn how to prepare them deliciously for rounding out meals each week for growing children—and grown-ups as well.
4. Spread the good nutrition and flavor of meat by combining with such foods as cereals, rice, noodles, dumplings, macaroni, spaghetti, potatoes and other vegetables.
5. Plan leftovers carefully for use in such dishes as stew, hash, croquettes, soufflés and chop suey.
6. Remember meat goes further when cooked at moderate, even temperatures.
7. Send for the booklets shown below.

Why we must share

The Foods Requirement Committee of the War Production Board has asked civilian consumers to limit their use of meat to 2½ pounds of meat per person per week—on a voluntary basis. Why? The answer is simple.

The meat packing industry, now serving three customers—the American armed forces, our fighting allies and the domestic civilian population—has converted from normal peacetime operations to an all-out effort for victory.

The Army, Navy, and Lend-lease come first. For victory, civilians must share what is left. Patriotic citizens prefer to follow the American way—of choosing to share. The "Share the Meat" Program is based on the honor system; it is a voluntary plan.

THESE BOOKLETS WILL HELP YOU

1. "32 Tested Meat Recipes"—Step-by-step recipes and complete menus.
2. New Edition of "Meat Buying Guide for Thrifty Meals"—Purse size—48-page handbook of more than 80 meat cuts. What to ask for, how to prepare, what to serve with them and easy ways to plan meals for good nutrition.

FOR BOTH BOOKS, send 5¢ in coin to AMERICAN MEAT INSTITUTE, Dept. 10, Lock Box No. 1133, Chicago, Illinois.

Union Chiefs Resume Their Peace Talks

By Dillard Stokes
Post Staff Writer

Leaders of the American Federation of Labor and the Congress of Industrial Organizations met at the Willard yesterday to take up the peace negotiations broken off by John L. Lewis three years ago.

The peacemakers talked more than two hours, their meeting evidently dominated for the time by Daniel J. Tobin, general president of the A. F. L. Teamsters Union, whose booming voice could be heard through the locked doors of the meeting room.

Harmonious Meeting

When the delegates came out, this was all they had to say:

"We had a very harmonious meeting this afternoon and we will hold another tomorrow at 10."

As Harry C. Bates, the Bricklayers Union president who is chairman of the A. F. of L. peace committee, made this disclosure, he was corroborated by Philip Murray, president of the C. I. O.

"I subscribe," said Murray, and that was all.

So what the peacemakers were harmonious about all afternoon—scheduled for 10 a.m.—the meeting did not start until 2 in the afternoon because trains were late—remained obscure.

More Preliminaries

But there was good reason to suppose that their harmony did not go beyond the preliminaries of the peace conference, as the CIO draft of peace terms was not expected to be brought forward at the outset.

Immediate Merger Sought

The C. I. O. leadership wants an immediate merger of the two big labor groups. Philip Murray, R. J. Thomas, the president of the Automobile Workers, and Julius Emspak, of the Electrical Workers, have brought the peace conference a detailed proposition. Here are the proposals:

1. There will be a new labor federation of the international unions which now make up the C. I. O. and the A. F. of L.

2. These unions will retain their present identity and will be alloted seats on the federation executive board according to their membership.

3. Until there is a national convention of the new federation Murray and William Green, the A. F. of L. president, will be joint presidents.

4. Jurisdictional disputes will be settled within the new federation.

History in Two Words

The phrase "jurisdictional disputes" tells in two words the history of seven years of rivalry between the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O.

When John L. Lewis three years ago suggested a merger, with such details to be worked out later, the A. F. of L. reply was an emphatic "no." That is believed to be the answer to the present peace parley by Bates and Tobin and William L. Hutcheson, president of the Carpenters' Union.

The issue of leadership may be less sore, since the decline of Lewis, to whom so many people had so many and so violent objections, but it is by no means out of the present picture.

Believed Sure to Balk

And the A. F. of L. leaders are believed sure to balk at the "proportional representation" plan for the new executive committee. Control of this committee means control of the new labor group. From time to time the A. F. of L. has challenged C. I. O. membership claims before, and the leadership is hardly likely to admit them now, with so much power depending on the result.

If the A. F. of L. delegates do turn down the merger plan, the C. I. O. leaders are reported to have another suggestion in their briefcases. This is for continued negotiation, while a joint committee is set up to chew over the present jurisdictional disputes. From the joint committee, there would be a resort to the War Labor Board for arbitration.

The peace conference is likely to take up the details of these proposals this morning. Tobin evidently expected the meeting to get somewhere, for his last words were:

"We may have some news for you."

For 'Unfitness'

Tony Martin Discharged From Navy

TONY MARTIN

By the Associated Press

San Francisco, Dec. 1 — Tony Martin, former radio singer and more recently a chief specialist in the Navy, has been discharged for "unfitness," the Twelfth Naval District said today. He was ordered to report to his Draft Board.

The order was effective yesterday noon.

The Navy said Martin, a principal witness in the recent court-martial of Lieut. Comdr. Maurice N. Aroff here, was notified of the action while on Treasure Island, and he told naval officials he would report to his Draft Board in Beverly Hills immediately.

He was quoted as saying he did not "want to walk around in civilian clothes."

The Navy said the order was "not a dishonorable discharge and does not carry any degradation." It was issued by the Bureau of (Navy) Personnel in Washington.

Those who saw Martin leave the post said he was in tears.

Naval officials said Martin, who had been in charge of staging shows at the Treasure Island base in San Francisco Bay, twice applied for sea duty.

Lieut. Comdr. Aroff, whom a Navy spokeman in Washington recently said had been discharged from the service, was charged with accepting a $950 automobile from Martin as a gift for "facilitating" Martin's enlistment. The commander was a naval procurement officer.

Aroff was also accused of accepting smaller gifts from others who became ensigns and telling untruths when questioned by naval authorities.

Martin enlisted in the Navy last winter when he faced imminent induction in the Army. After he was classified 1-A by the draft board, Aroff wrote to the board and asked it to delay induction of the singer. Martin enlisted as a chief specialist when Aroff twice failed in attempts to get him a commission.

Rental Car Industry Is 'Frozen' by ODT

The Office of Defense Transportation yesterday "froze" the rental car industry.

The order affects approximately 300,000 livery cars, 28,000 funeral cars and 5,000 drive-yourself cars.

The order provides that no person or company not licensed in the rental car business as of yesterday may engage in the business, and that no person or company may increase the number of vehicles now engaged in rental service.

President Hints Income From Investments Should Also Be Limited

By the Associated Press

President Roosevelt said yesterday he was curious to know what Congress would do about limiting incomes from investments and inheritances, now that salaries have been restricted by executive action to a gross of $67,200.

Earlier an informed source said the President would ask Congress next month to limit investment income to the same figure by taxation. Speaking at a press conference, the President declined to confirm this directly.

He did, however, point out that he made a similar recommendation last year. In addition he said the country was vigorously criticizing the uneven situation of a ceiling on salaries but none on investment incomes.

It was incorrect, he told the reporters, to refer to the restriction as a $25,000 limitation. That gave the impression, he said, that $25,000 was the gross figure, from which taxes would have to be paid. He suggested he might explain the question to the public in a radio speech. In any event, he said he planned such an address before January 1.

Cites Case of Railroads

In connection with the salary question, he referred to the railroad situation in 1933. Many roads were on the brink of bankruptcy, he said, and the RFC was making them loans to tide them over.

Jesse Jones, then chairman of the RFC, complained, he said, that the roads were paying unnecessarily high salaries—some reaching $150,000 a year, and all averaging about $100,000.

Jones, the President continued, thought that in view of the financial condition of the lines, and in view of the fact that they were borrowing money from the Government, these salaries were exorbitant. He proposed a limitation of $50,000 to be included in the terms of any railroad loans the RFC might make.

The immediate result was what the President called an awful howl from the railroad executives. Jones yielded to the point of a $60,000 salary ceiling for officials of the lines involved and all but one of them agreed.

These officials did so, Mr. Roosevelt continued, because of the emergency in which their railroads found themselves.

Different Sort of Emergency

Right now, he added, there was a different sort of an emergency, one involving the bankruptcy of the Nation through the loss of the war or saving the Nation through winning the war. For that reason, he thought the public should accept the $67,200 limit on investment income as well as salaries.

If the proposal is advanced, Senator Vandenberg (Republican) of Michigan said yesterday, it will encounter sharp congressional opposition. The limit on salaries, applied through an executive order, has already been widely criticized in Congress.

The salary restriction, as put in force by James F. Byrnes, the director of economic stabilization, forbids the payment or receipt of any gross annual salary of more than $67,200. The payment of insurance premiums, debts and Federal taxes, it was estimated, would leave a net income of about $25,000.

No such limitation was placed on income from investments, because, it was explained, Mr. Roosevelt felt he had no legal authority to impose it.

Meanwhile, there were reports that the salary limitation order might be enforced through insistence upon the $67,000 gross salary, rather than the $25,000 net.

As a result, some pointed out, it might be possible for individuals with unusually large deductions for dependents to retain $27,000 or more.

Beans for "Pepper-Upper" Vitamins

Beans are important—now! They're chuck full of nutritious goodness, especially Vitamin B_1—that "pepper-upper" vitamin that acts as the vitamin miracle man, stimulating run-down appetites and quieting jangled war nerves. Beans also contain protein, perfect in combination with different vegetables as the main dish of a meal.

When served as in the menu given below, beans become family favorites—and interchangeable dependables.

BOSTON BAKED BEANS
(Patriotic too)

8 cups cooked dried beans	¼ tsp. paprika
½ cup finely chopped onion	½ tsp. salt
¼ tsp. prepared mustard	½ cup water
	2 tbsps. dark molasses
	3 slices bacon

Place cooked beans in well-greased 1½ qt. casserole. Thoroughly combine onion, mustard, paprika, salt, water and molasses. Pour over beans. Strip with bacon. Bake in moderate oven (350° F.) 1 hour and 15 minutes or until browned. Serves 6.

THIS IS IMPORTANT

UP-TO-DATE bean cookery suggests that to cook navy, lima, pink and red, kidney or cranberry beans, you pick over beans carefully, removing any damaged beans or foreign particles. Wash well in sieve or bowl. Do not soak.* Improved agricultural methods have made it possible to produce more tender beans with tender skins. Soaking will cut cooking time about one-third, but makes beans mushy and unattractive. Place in kettle at least 4 times greater in volume than beans. Add hot water to cover and 1 tsp. salt for each cup beans and cover. Cook at simmering temperature until beans are tender, 2 to 3 hours. Add more water as needed to keep beans well covered during cooking.

Limas should be soaked in water to cover 6 to 8 hours or over night as they cling to their tough outer skin.*

Farmers Face Penalties for Not Producing

By Paul H. Barkley
Associated Press Staff Writer

Stressing a need for meeting war crop goals, the Department of Agriculture announced yesterday that farmers who fail to achieve the production allotments next year will be penalized by stiff deductions from their Federal crop subsidies.

The department explained 1943 Agricultural Adjustment Agency payments would be designed to help get full production of the kind of crops needed and all crop payments would be contingent on the degree to which a farmer meets his goal.

The department said failure of farmers to plant at least 90 per cent of their allotments for corn, cotton, peanuts, rice, tobacco and wheat would result in payment deductions at a rate five times the rate of payment.

Thus, it was explained, a farmer's crop subsidy would be wiped out entirely should he plant only 70 per cent of his allotment. Under certain conditions, however, the department added, farmers will be able to substitute special war crops or designated feed crops for their allotment crops and still remain in compliance.

Corn Deduction

On the other hand, growers of these basic crops will be penalized at a rate ten times the compliance rate for over-planting cotton, tobacco and wheat, since the 1943 allotments indicate the maximum production needed. The deduction for excess corn acreage will be at the same rate except it will be limited to the corn payment alone unless the acreage of corn on the farm exceeds the usual acreage.

There will be no deduction for overplanting peanuts and rice as these are considered vital war crops. Nor will AAA soil conservation payments be affected.

"The farm plans will be a virtual blue-print of intended 1943 production," the department said, "and will be worked out by each farmer with the assistance of AAA committeemen."

State production goals for special war crops are now being studied at four regional meetings at Denver, Chicago, Memphis and New York. These State figures will be broken down to county goals by State farm war boards and will be distributed among the farms by county war boards.

The department said the goals would be distributed on the basis of adaptability of soil, availability of crop land, equipment and labor, past acreage of war crops, and other related factors.

National allotments have been announced for wheat, cotton and corn, and will be announced for other crops before spring planting.

The 1943 wheat allotment has been set at 55 million acres, cotton at 27,400,000 and corn at 43,423,000, but farmers have been urged to shift wheat and cotton acreage where possible into war crops to achieve a national goal of 52,500,000 for wheat and 22,500,000 for cotton.

State Officials Urge Relief For Farmer From Price Control

By the Associated Press

State agriculture officials told the Senate Agriculture Committee yesterday that "farmers are almost put in a straight jacket by some of the rules made by these bureaus in Washington" as they urged relief for farmers from price control and other Federal regulations.

Tom Linder, Georgia commissioner of agriculture, contended "a food famine is inevitable" unless agriculture is designated a war industry, farm workers exempted from the draft on that basis and agricultural controls relaxed.

R. A. Trovatten, president of the National Association of State Commissioners, Secretaries and Directors of Agriculture, and commissioner in Minnesota, presented the attitude of the organization to the committee, and Chairman Thomas (Democrat) of Oklahoma promised to try to arrange a conference with War Production Donald M. Nelson.

Trovatten made the remark about Washington bureaus and he and other association members outlined a picture of farm production handicapped by ceiling prices, labor shortages and other wartime conditions.

Leo V. Card, Michigan commissioner, said "some of the troubles can be traced to the operation of OPA price ceilings," particularly prospective meat rationing. He said 33 1-3 to 44 per cent less meat would be placed on the market from Michigan because of premature slaughtering of cattle, on account of the price ceilings and a labor shortage.

When gasoline rationing was announced for the Middle West, he added, imported Mexican laborers "gassed up their cars and took off en mass."

E. H. Everson, South Dakota secretary of agriculture, said he thought the new order lifting the ceiling on farm wages would be of little help because the farmers still could not pay enough to compete with war industries for labor under present prices for crops.

John T. Brown, Ohio director of agriculture, said farm conditions in Ohio were the same as those in Michigan. He also asked the committee to use its influence, "if you have any left with the powers that be," to relieve Ohio school children of an order by Defense Transportation Director Joseph B. Eastman requiring children to walk to school if they lived less than 2 miles from it or a bus line.

George G. Schweis of the Nevada department of agriculture complained that ranchers were unable to obtain spare parts for trucks that broke down.

Herman Ihde, Wisconsin's acting director of agriculture, proposed that the 40-hour-week and time-and-a-half for overtime in industry be abolished, "putting all on a 54-hour week," to provide a "big reservoir" of labor and keep help on the farm.

Pearl Harbor Details To Be in Statement

Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox said yesterday that an Office of War Information statement to be issued December 7—the first anniversary of the Pearl Harbor attack—would tell the story of what happened that day, but that it would not be "a complete disclosure."

"There still are certain things we are not telling the Japs," he told reporters. "You wouldn't want us to tell them."

Riot Closes Toulon Plant

London, Dec. 1 (AP).—Evidence grew tonight of internal revolt in France, where rioting by hundreds of sullen workers at Toulon compelled authorities to drop their attempt to reopen the naval arsenal that was closed last Friday when French sailors scuttled the main fleet.

But orders, presumably from Germans, brought about reopening of Toulon's huge La Seyene shipyards.

The Vichy radio itself described how French laborers first rioted yesterday, leading Vice Admiral Marquis to broadcast a notice that the arsenal gates "will be closed until further notice.'

Gas IS A WAR FUEL
...It Must Be Conserved

Out of various late discussions of local fuel rationing one of the leading facts to emerge is—HOUSEHOLD GAS MUST NOW BE CONSERVED.

Here are the reasons:

First—Natural gas as well as the coal and oil used in manufactured gas are vital to war industries. Gas is now doing double duty—in the armament plants, in the home; and the first is first in importance.

Second—With a shortage of oil for fuel throwing extra demand on gas, our manufacturing and transmission facilities—heavily drawn on by normal requirements of an increased population—could be taxed beyond capacity on "peak load" days.

So gas joins the growing list of consumer items to suffer restriction. Thus far no compulsory rationing has been ordered. It is at present up to the people of greater Washington to show that it can be done and will be done through voluntary effort.

Curtailment by compulsion is very likely to follow if this fails. Perhaps by mandate of the War Production Board; perhaps by conditions of actual local shortage which could easily arise. The latter might necessitate, for a time, a complete shutoff of gas in whole sections of greater Washington.

The public is earnestly called upon to voluntarily join forces with the Washington Gas Light Company in achieving the full saving of gas required by this city.

WHAT YOU CAN DO TO SAVE GAS

Gas Range

• Do not use oven—or any other range burner—for room heating.

• Prepare entire meal either on top burners or in oven, not using both at one time.

• Never boil a quart of water when you can do with a cupful. Reduce flame immediately when liquid has come to a boil.

• Do not turn on the gas until cooking utensils and food are placed over the burner, ready for cooking. Do not prolong preheating of oven or broiler needlessly. Turn gas off immediately when cooking operation is completed.

Gas Furnace

• Set thermostat at not over 65 degrees during the day; 60 or lower at night.

• During the day shut off bedrooms and other portions of the house not in use. Where practicable arrange to live in one or two rooms for most of the day.

• Check all openings for hidden drafts—apply weatherstripping and caulking. Where obtainable, provide storm doors and window sash. Improve insulation wherever possible.

Gas Refrigerator

• Allow ample time for cooked foods to cool before putting in refrigerator.

• Avoid overcrowding, leaving ample room for air to circulate on every shelf.

• Refrain from opening door more often than necessary.

• Set cold control to provide moderate, instead of extremely low temperature.

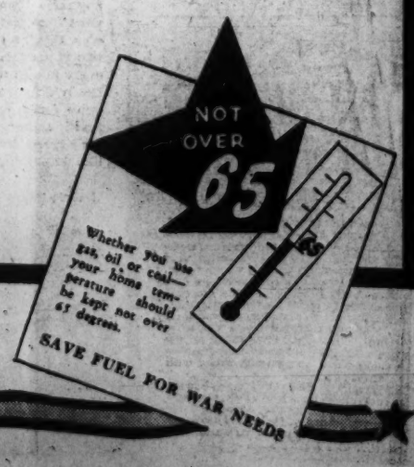
Gas Water Heater

• Reduce the consumption of water in baths and showers.

• Keep faucets tightly closed; replace washers and repair other leaks.

• Avoid a continuous stream of hot water for hand washing and dish washing.

• Postpone or reduce heavy laundry work on extremely cold days.



NOT OVER 65
Whether you use gas, oil or coal—your home temperature should be kept not over 65 degrees.

Industrial Silver Lack Laid to WPB

Senate Group Told Laws Are Not Needed If Control Is Eased

By the Associated Press

The Senate Banking Committee, in a tumultuous session during which Senator McCarran (Democrat) of Nevada said his life had been threatened, received assurances from the Nation's largest silver buyer that removal of Government restrictions would provide foreign supplies of the metal for manufacture of jewelry and tableware.

The committee is studying a bill to permit release of Treasury-held silver for such manufacturing.

Francis H. Brownell of New York, chairman of American Smelting & Refining Co., testified his plants bought 30 per cent of the domestic ores and concentrates and 45 per cent of foreign silver entering the country.

In November, he asserted, he sold 1,049,000 ounces of foreign silver to war industries under WPB priorities, and 2,075,000 to the Metals Reserve Corp. for storage.

"If the WPB would lift restrictions against granting priorities to the commercial users, there would be enough foreign silver available for their needs, provided the OPA also lifted ceiling prices on jewelry and tableware to permit their purchase of domestic silver at the floor price of 71.11 cents an ounce," Brownell said.

"There is no necessity for legislation, but if it requires legislation to act, I should support this bill if it is amended so as not to interfere with monetary policy on silver."

Earlier McCarran told Walter E. Spahr, secretary of the Economists' National Committee on Monetary Policy, that he "questioned the motives" behind a Saturday Evening Post story in which Spahr criticized silver State Senators.

Spahr refused to answer when McCarran demanded to know "how much did you get for that article" in which "you reviled us" and attempted "to brand 12 United States Senators as traitors."

Testifying in opposition to a bill by Senator Green (Democrat) of Rhode Island to permit release of so-called free silver at 50 cents an ounce, McCarran disclosed that the Secret Service had sent him a copy of a letter received by President Roosevelt.

The "ill-advised" sender, McCarran testified, threatened to "come to Washington and kill me if certain events occurred."

McCarran also charged the editor of the Saturday Evening Post had said someone should "come into a meeting of the 12 Senators and use a lead pipe."

McCarran asserted "a man is judged by his interests" and told Spahr he would seek to identify Spahr's interests. The witness replied his own interest was that of a patriotic American, an economist and a writer.

Spahr said he could indorse Green's bill if it were amended to provide for the issuance of Federal Reserve notes, backed by gold, to replace silver certificates whose Treasury silver backing was removed from the Government.

Under the Green bill, the Government would be authorized to sell Treasury-held silver, not specifically deposited against outstanding certificates, for nonconsumptive purposes not detrimental to the war effort.

High School's Urged To Gear to War

Memphis, Dec. 1—(AP)—A fighting general of the Army Air Forces appealed today for high school educators to "gear their programs to war needs" since their graduates are destined for the armed forces.

"It is not too much to say that until the war is won, the secondary schools must gear their programs to war needs," said Maj. Gen. Ralph Royce in an address before the Southern Association of Colleges and secondary schools. He added that with the transformation they should remember "we must include among our war needs a wise and proper preparation for the peace that some day must come."

First Day of Tire Inspection Brings Numerous Complaints

Washington motorists, garage and gasoline station operators found the road to complete tire inspection a rough one yesterday as the inspection program in the District started rolling.

On the whole, however, the multitudinous complaints regarding the lack of coherence of instructions and lack of forms and posters distributed, were good-natured. Most car owners and station operators were of the opinion that rolling would be smoother when the program got into high gear.

While motorist complaints were numerous and varied, they were not nearly as specific as those from the operators of stations designated as inspectors. These, mainly, dealt with complete absence of distribution of forms for customers, instructions to inspectors and posters designating inspection points. Motorists were not without fault, either, for many of them turned up at the inspection stations minus section two of their inspection sheets, the part needed to show the condition of tires.

Most of the inspectors were of the opinion that there would have to be a better showing in the number of inspections per day if the 10,000 cars scheduled to be inspected between now and Friday were to complete the indicated program.

Largest stumbling block in slowing down inspections was the fact that about 50 per cent of the tires had their serial numbers facing inward. This necessitated scrambling under cars, jacking them up or raising them on hydraulic lifts to determine the numbers.

Some specific complaints given to The Post in its survey were:

The Atlantic Service Station at 1423 R Street Northwest—We had all too many persons come around who'd left their forms at home. Of all who applied, we completed inspections on five.

The American Service Center, at 4900 Wisconsin Avenue Northwest—We inspected 150 cars, or thereabouts, and on better than 50 per cent of them we had to use a lift to get a look at the inner side of the tire.

Lakeman's Gas Station, 915 Rhode Island Avenue Northwest—We had a few, four or five, but our instructions and forms hadn't been received, so we told 'em to come back.

Carolina Service Station, 232 Massachusetts Avenue Northwest—We didn't have a single applicant for inspection, but we were out of gas and closed up for three days and just opened today, so I guess that was partly the reason.

Lee D. Butler Garage, 1121 Twenty-first Street — We made about six inspections, but we had no forms for bad tires and no written instructions, only those we'd received at the mass meeting Monday night, and we wanted to take it sort of easy until we were sure.

Eubank's Service Station, 3054 Mount Pleasant Street Northwest—Plenty of applications, but no forms and no instructions. What's more, I'd say no cooperation.

The inspection, which will make car operators eligible for recapping, subject to ration boards' approval after certification of need by the inspectors, is expected to occupy several weeks before all the automobiles in Washington are inspected.

Interesting Booklet on Request

"35 won't hurt your car if you're careful at 00 miles an hour..."

"A DOCTOR and another customer of mine could even get a new car by U. S. regulations. But they're careful with the car they've got—doing under 35, same as other people in wartime. I say that's the spirit.

"I can do some of my part along the same line, by telling you why this 35-mile 'tops' is bound to make your car last even longer yet, if you don't hunt up grief at 00 miles an hour!

"That's no wisecrack—00 miles an hour. It's when your car is standing still and your engine is starting cold, needing lubrication the worst of ever. So I don't just change your oil. I change you to an OIL-PLATED engine with my Conoco N*th* motor oil for Winter. Nothing special to do or pay, but Conoco N*th* attaches OIL-PLATING all over your engine's insides as close as plating on bumpers. Sort of 'magnetism' makes N*th* oil keep the OIL-PLATING from all draining down to the crankcase overnight, and all day, etc. Sooner than you're even in the car, OIL-PLATING is up to where you need it—instead of taking time getting through skinny holes and slits. You've had lots of people's word besides mine, that the worst danger of engine wear comes in starting up cold. But did you ever see something plainer to get around that, than OIL-PLATING your engine with Conoco N*th* oil? I'm extra glad I've got it for you now in wartime. Remember, oil is ammunition—use it wisely."

Local Action

The great fire in Boston has been a warning signal to local governments throughout the country to order fresh investigations of the manner in which fire laws and building codes are observed. Many of them, doubtless, are honored in the breach. Night clubs and other resorts of late-hour entertainment are not noted for their respect for local regulations. The less savory haunts are the hangouts of gangs engaged in undercover illegalities. For instance, it was only a few years ago that an underworld character was shot in the very club in Boston which was gutted last Saturday. And a three-cornered tie-up among night clubs, local vice rings and corrupt city machines is not uncommon. Such dance and drink resorts, the patrons of which are not above taking advantage of an easy escape from payment of inflated checks, balk particularly at the installation of the requisite number of exits—at least at keeping those exits unlocked. In these circumstances it is natural that the traditional inertia of local communities toward their own government has been shaken by the Boston holocaust. They are insisting that their own houses be put in order.

Here in Washington lethargy toward local government is almost a tradition. The Capital has no voice in its own affairs, it is voteless even in its national Government, and has to be content with the spare moments which an overworked Congress can give to it. It is only when a warning is run up like the warning from Boston that we are reminded of our local problems. To the hazards of fire in our overcrowded Capital—the fastest-growing community in the country—this newspaper has constantly drawn attention. Scarcely a week passes that we do not get a complaint that some ancient public building or other is a "firetrap." Yet the District is still operating on a rigid statute 36 years old which is literally unenforceable in the new housing in Washington. A bill to repeal that law and give the Commissioners authority to set up modern fire-escape regulations had been before Congress more than a year before the Boston fire happened. It had the support of the Building Congress, the Washington Housing Association, and many other civic groups. Yet all hope for its enactment had been abandoned because of a dispute over a section of the bill requiring remote-control fire-alarm systems to be installed in certain classes of apartment houses.

Now the dust has been taken off the measure, and there is some hope that Congress may spare the time to iron out the conflict and enact up-to-date fire-escape regulations. Other activity is likewise reported. As in other communities, the District is now to be combed for violators of District ordinances. The Commissioners have issued instructions to Building Inspector Davis and Fire Marshal Lauber to make a fresh inspection of places of public gathering. It is a prudent move. Perhaps the Commissioners may widen their directive to include hospitals, which are the subject of most of the complaints coming to this newspaper. Maybe Boston's tragedy may invigorate the sense of responsibility on the part of Congress toward the problems afflicting the District and promote action along many needed fronts.

In Uruguay

The people of the progressive South American republic of Uruguay have long since made it clear that their sympathies in the war are overwhelmingly on the side of the United Nations. So, in a sense, it was a foregone conclusion that when they went to the polls this week to elect a new chief executive, they would choose Dr. Juan Jose Amezaga over his opponent, Senator Luis Alberto Herrera. Dr. Amezaga stands four-square on a platform favoring continuation of the pro-democratic, pro-United Nations policy of President Alfredo Baldomir, whereas his opponent favored a return by Uruguay to the kind of isolationist policy pursued by Uruguay's neighbor, Argentina. And while they were at it, the Uruguayan voters did away with the constitutional provision dividing Senate seats equally between the majority and the leading minority parties, a provision that has been productive of many difficulties during recent years.

Coming To Grips

Few agreements concluded in this war are more important than the agreement which Capt. Oliver Lyttelton, Britain's Minister of Production, carries home in his pocket to London. It is a victory agreement. Between London and Washington there has been an ironing out of all differences of opinion on the common strategy and the pooling of production which have hitherto made for endless arguments. A likemindedness has emerged on the steps to be pursued in common in insuring our triumph over Hitlerism. In these discussions, which have been going on for the last few weeks, the guidance and counsel of our President have been of inestimable value. But the hammering out of agreement has been left to the planners and strategists of both nations. And, evidently, they have seen in Africa how much power is generated by the offensive and how much strength flows from union.

No doubt the new arrangements account quite as much as the events in Africa and Russia for the optimism which Captain Lyttelton on Monday expressed to the newspapermen. Victory, he said, could be won in 1943. That depends, of course, upon the way in which both sides live up to their undertakings. But there will be no dissent from the thesis that the dovetailing of strategy and supply which has been arranged is, in fact, the foundation of early success, especially since the object is to bring "the maximum impact" to bear against the enemy "in 1943."

In this statement we have a recognition that there can be no limited commitments in maintaining the initiative over Hitler. Our striking power is to be mobilized and shipped abroad with regard not to pre-existing military arrangements but to the new deadlines of the war. The fighting fronts, in other words, will have precedence over the training camps. Wherever there are men at grips with the enemy, they will be kept armed and provisioned. Tanks idling in this country are not helping the war with Nazi Germany, nor are trained pilots in England, waiting for planes from America which never come, making the contribution of which they are capable. Our maximum impact upon Hitler will be expressed and can be expressed only by marrying our material to the fighting men.

On this theory ships will come first in our priority of production in order to keep our arsenal joined to the fighting fronts. Escort vessels will likewise be pushed in our program, for the U-boat danger has become a greater menace to our initiative than Hitler's weakened legions. Aircraft comes after shipping among our urgent requirements, and, finally, there are the needs of our ground forces, which hitherto have taken material that might have been put into shipping and aircraft. This new order is so different from the old as to call attention to the new resiliency in our military thinking. It is as inspiring as it is refreshing. What is demonstrated is an eagerness to hasten our rendezvous with Hitler—an eagerness which must be inspiriting to our Russian and Chinese Allies. Then, after victory, the time will come to march together in the same way—as Mr. Churchill prophesied—to our rendezvous with Japanese militarism.

Undoubtedly the success of our African offensive has promoted the meeting of minds which has been achieved in the negotiations with Captain Lyttelton. That offensive was intended as a softener of the task of beating the Nazis. Probably some such operation was necessary before a comprehensive strategy could be worked out. As Napoleon, whom Winston Churchill quoted on Sunday, said, "War can be made to support war." So it is proving in North Africa, but just as significantly, the success of our joint venture so far in Africa has bred a new faith in early victory and a mutual respect between the English-speaking Allies. Only with these ingredients, only with this experience, could there have been such an over-all strategy for 1943 as Captain Lyttelton outlined.

One Objective

The conference of Allied military, air and naval leaders held somewhere in North Africa last week is proof that the British Eighth Army which is pursuing Marshal Rommel in Libya and the Anglo-American forces which are battling the Axis in Tunisia are not engaged in separate and isolated campaigns. They form part of a common enterprise—an enterprise dedicated to ridding all of North Africa of German and Italian troops.

That objective is in process of achievement. Even while warning the British and the Americans not to underestimate the difficulties and dangers yet ahead, Winston Churchill declared on Sunday that "before long" the enemy will be expelled from Africa. And as if to underline this confident belief, news came soon after that the British First Army had captured the town of Djedida, 12 miles northwest of Tunis, on the railroad connecting Tunis and Bizerte. In other words, the Axis forces at these two points have now been isolated from each other. Moreover, Tunis is now within artillery range of Allied guns, and at the same time Bizerte continues to be the frequent target of Allied air attacks. The indications are, therefore, that despite all the frantic efforts Hitler has made to rush planes to Tunisia, superiority in the air over that battlefield rests with us. If that continues, the outcome of the Battle of Tunisia need not be in doubt.

In the meantime news from Tripolitania remains scant. There is still no indication whether Rommel will make a stand at El Agheila, as he did once before, or move farther west so as to put the maximum possible distance between him and the Eighth Army. In either case we can confidently expect that General Montgomery will be ready for him. In view of the vast distance covered by the British forces since the decisive battle of El Alamein was won, time is needed to bring up supplies and reinforcements. When the attack on Rommel is launched, we can be sure it will be in full force so that the struggle for Tripolitania will not be a thrice-told tale. This time there is every intention of finishing the job.

One Man Alone?

In his masterly survey of the war, last Sunday, Winston Churchill hammered away at the thesis that "one man and one man alone" is responsible for Italy's present plight. That man, of course, is Mussolini. It was Mussolini, said Churchill, who had "led, exploited and disgraced" the "hard-working, gifted and once-happy Italian people." Had it not been for him Italy would have remained neutral, "enjoying peace and prosperity in a world of storm." It was the hyena in Mussolini's nature which led him to "break all bounds of decency and common sense" and set his nation on the path to ruin.

Now there can be no doubt that on Mussolini's shoulders rests the prime responsibility for the catastrophe which Italy faces. He stands condemned before the bar of public opinion and before his own people as a traitor to all that is best in Italian civilization, the architect of Italy's ruin. But is the guilt for Italy's sorry situation his alone? Are there none of the 40,000,000 to whom Churchill appealed who share responsibility with the Duce? The suggestion in Churchill's speech is that the Italian people are not themselves responsible for what happened. They did not help determine the course of events. They had no say in policy. They were the hewers of wood and drawers of water, the slaves and serfs of the Fascist regime, the cannon fodder which Mussolini needed and used to realize his pretentious dreams of imperial splendor.

Such a thesis may have its uses in psychological warfare of the kind we are now waging—along with the warfare of a more lethal nature—against Italy. But it is too simple. And it is not without its elements of danger. The danger is that we may carry out in Italy, and deliberately, the same policy which through military necessity and the unavoidable force of circumstances we have carried out in North Africa. By placing sole guilt on Mussolini and, by implication, whitewashing all others we may leave the way open for the perpetuation in Italy of the power and prerogatives of those who were responsible for Mussolini's coming to power and who for 20 years have given him their grudging or ungrudging support.

If it be assumed, as Mr. Churchill does assume, that the Italian people possess at this time the power to get rid of the incubus of Fascism then, by the same token, they must have possessed that power all along. And if the monarch or some other scion of the dynasty or some general or other individual comes forward to swing the country over to the Allies, we may well ask what this individual has been doing all these 20 years. From none of them—King or general or banker or industrialist—was there ever a peep raised publicly against the move to align Italy with the Axis, against Italy's entrance into the war, against the shameful assault on Greece, against the Nuremberg laws which Mussolini, in imitation of his German wirepuller, introduced into Italy? By their silence they gave acquiescence to everything that Mussolini did. And we can be sure that had things gone differently, they would not have been averse to sharing in the rewards of Mussolini's duplicity.

There must be many high-placed individuals in Italy, no doubt, who are willing and eager to jump on the Allied bandwagon now that the war is going badly for the Axis. Before making any deals with them, we had better examine their credentials carefully. All the men who have betrayed Italy and not merely Mussolini alone must suffer the consequences of their guilt. One Darlan may have been necessary. But one Darlan is enough.

INTRUSION

From the hill's crest
To the river's brink,
Where the loon nest
And the deer drink,
Any quiet word
Wakes the sudden shock
Of thunder stirred
Out of sleeping rock.

Quickened deer melt
From the dark river
To each quake felt
On the wind's quiver;
A shadow drifts
Where white waters race
When the loon lifts
From its hiding place.

When all sounds cease,
The echo's thrust
Subsides to peace
Like a settled dust
Where the loon stood
And the deer drank
By the dim wood
On the riverbank.

Cooperation Needed

It is the concern of each one of us that aggression and imperialism together with militarism and wars, must cease, if the world is to be saved from destruction. If this result is to be obtained, it must rest upon the cooperation of all.

This is especially applicable to those of the United States who are of foreign descent and have retained ancestral views more or less antagonistic to American principles. Many of these have supported various so-called just rights and claims of the Axis new order. It is also applicable to isolationists, and those supporters of America who argue that other nations have the right to do as they please. While these profess Americanism, it is nevertheless true that they have been giving assistance to Hirohito, to Hitler, and to Mussolini, and have thereby aided in bringing about the present day holocaust.

Amongst the Italians, there are those who gave to Mussolini their military services; others donated brass, silver and gold (including wedding rings and crucifixes), with donations in money to an amount approximating 10 million dollars collected from individuals and Italian associations. Today, these folks should, to redeem themselves, give America as much as they gave Mussolini. They can buy war bonds to help, but their true sincerity will be made manifest by open and definite support toward the suppression of Mussolini and Fascism, and the establishment of freedom for Italy in a new republic based on democracy.

As the march in this direction progresses we need to look into the future—to the time when victory comes to the Allied nations. The question of whom we shall help to put at the head of the government of a nation that accepts and establishes a democratic form of government, is one which must be met. It should be answered by leaving the choice to the people of the nation—in 1789 the selection of Washington was not an accident. Again the question of armaments should be handled by the United Nations which fought the war until an international court of law and justice has been established and clothed with police powers. Legislative assemblies elected by the people of the nations should put into operation the principles laid down in the Atlantic Charter and the Four Freedoms. IGNATIUS GERACI.

Wrong Sentiments

Were looking for some Christmas cards
To send our men in service,
And as we search among the trash
It really does unnerve us.
The Christmas messages we see
Are "Season's Greetings! Swat the Axis, Slap the Japs," I wonder why
They left out, "Pay your taxes."

The messages from home must be
A word of Hope and Love,
Help them look up and see the Star
To guide their thoughts above
The dust and sweat and battle grime,
For when the victory's won,
These same brave men will teach the world
To follow God's own Son.

On Exaggeration

Cannot something be done to explain to our people the exaggeration of the Russian announcements of German losses? I mean in the way of a footnote of interpretation and deflation. People in countries where such figures of speech are customary make deductions automatically, but the American public fails both to make deductions from figures given and to add them up over a period of time to see whether or not they make sense.

In 1920, two officers estimated the number in a procession passing our windows in Budapest. They put it at between five and six thousand. The papers subsequently gave 35,000 and succeeding editions 60,000.

In 1903, an experienced British correspondent in Constantinople advised me, in judging figures issued from any source in that part of the world, to knock off a zero and divide by two—a formula which, in succeeding years, I have found fairly reliable. The eastern European does not lie, according to his national standards; he is simply using figures of speech which are understood and discounted by his compatriots.

Our people are not being deliberately misled by the Russians, but they do get a false idea of the situation through the failure of our press and radio commentators correctly to interpret such statements and so to enlighten the public. U. GRANT-SMITH.

In The Pentagon

The Army under the commandant of the Pentagon Building, Maj. Lester V. Johnson, can make a success out of its experimental operation of cafeterias within that building, if its efforts to buy commodities direct from the wholesaler and market and dispose of them in finished form to their employes at bargain prices are not handicapped by political pressure.

The Army mess department is equipped to do this job well for employes of the Pentagon Building. It can make it possible for employes to expend the money saved in the direction of purchases for defense savings stamps or toward transportation costs. When I say it can be done by the Army, I speak from experience in the consolidated mess office of an Army Air Corps post. The Army can feed well and handsomely the people of its command.

Those who have the power to prevent it, should not permit political pressure from any source to handicap this Army effort. It should run the course of experimental stages, and if it proves successful, as it no doubt will, it should be made a permanent agency of the Pentagon Building.

New Lingo

One of the difficulties we folks here at home will have will be to understand the lingo of our soldiers and marines when they return after fighting all over the globe. In 1918 it was merely a question of French: A. E. F., B. E. F. and French-French, with, in a few instances, a little German. In 1902, from China and the Philippines the lads acquired words from Spanish, Igorot, Malay and central Chinese, but things will now be changed.

From down under we shall hear "Digger" terms like "damper," "billabong," "dinkum," etc.; there will be terms from the Malay and Papuan, Taal, Javanese, pidgin-English, Arabian dialects such as are spoken in the Barbary States, Italian, French, Spanish, Portuguese, Fellaheen, Turkish, Persian and Hindustani, with possibly some words from the Burmese. Those in garrison in the West Indies will make acquaintance with a bunch of local words including the voodoo, and some will come home using words from the Icelandic, Norse, Northern Irish, Scotch and Russian, with a little Inuit and Finnish to top it off. We, here, shall be helpless at times; we, who can only understand the "you-all," woolly Western, sunny California, New England, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Brooklyn Heights brogues, not to mention a few mountaineer tongues. Manpower Draft

The proposal to draft manpower, if effected, will put us back in medieval times socially. Is some person or group to be empowerd to say to one man or woman, "Here is your job at $10 a day," and to another, "You take a job on the farm at $1 a day or 75 cents a day, and you have no right or chance to try for another or better?"

Apparently the authorities are bidding for an insurrection. Unfortunately, this not the first step toward it.

The powers have themselves created the chaos in labor by paying ridiculously high wages for so-called "war work," thus "drafting" people from less remunerative work. In wartime, isn't all necessary work "war work?" Why, then, the discrimination?

It is only necessary to adjust inequalities in compensation paid for different kinds of work to solve the problem. Make the inducements similar, and a stupid, arbitrary and red tape ridden manpower draft won't be necessary.

Let the powers have courage to correct their mistakes instead of upsetting the whole country to disguise them. B. L. HANSON.

Stretching Coffee

Grounds as such do have some value, but why not catch the coffee when it is in a yielding mood? After the brew has been through the processor, send it back the second time to immediately capture what essence may still be in the grounds. By using this method, where one tablespoon made a cup, two-thirds of a tablespoon will do the same job. Big saving, avoids "retreading" your coffee, also manpower wastage handling, drying and curing grounds.

The Post Impressionist

Peripatetics

I was raised in North Carolina, where owning dogs meant having a few scraggly hounds stretched out beneath a shade tree during the heat of the day, or a litter of new pups raising a racket down at the stable. Consequently I find myself confounded by that strange phenomenon, an integral part of the life of the city dweller—the dog walker.

In pondering this by-product of contemporary urban society it occurs to me that herein might possibly lie the first visible aspects of a civilization at decay, the final foible of an era having passed its rise and settled contentedly into the business of going quietly to pieces. Never before have so many people walked so many dogs in so many places. In moving to and fro, tending strictly to my own business, I keep falling over people with pooches. Dozens of them, of assorted shapes and chassis. Every time I leave my apartment they begin to spring up out of the shrubbery.

During years of harassment by these little duos and trios I have discovered that those who walk with dogs fall into distinct categories like fan dancers and cheeses. I've observed hundreds of them (dog walkers, not fan dancers), and the conclusion drawn from my involuntary research is that every dog walker belongs to a particular genus.

First, there's the sneaky type. This might be termed the one real blot on the dog walking escutcheon, for nothing is so detrimental to a cult as an attitude of guilty shame on the part of one of its devotees. The sneaky type is most prevalent among men. This is the fellow who waits until it is dark before taking his charge for a breath of fresh air. He not only casts a bad light on all fellow walkers of the night, but is making a bugaboo of something which should be as matter of fact as an oyster on the half shell.

I know one who habitually waits until past average bedtime to venture out, and on especially bright moonlight nights I don't see him at all. When he leaves his building he makes a beeline for a churchyard surrounded by a tall hedge. Before coming down his front steps he looks up and down the street with nervous glances, then, when he thinks no one is looking, darts quickly up the sidewalk and into the darkness behind the hedge, the puppy scampering wildly along at his heels. If I stroll past, the man peeps furtively over the top of the hedge, and meeting my gaze shrinks back within the protective shadows like a grave robber surprised in his nocturnal plundering. When his charge is ready to return, the master pokes his head around the hedge and waits until the sidewalks are free from passersby, then the two of them scurry back like mice to a pantry hole.

Next there is the indifferent type. This one walks when it suits him, or not at all if that suits him better. Some quadrupeds never know whether they will get to go at five, nine, or not until Saturday. A great deal depends on how the folks are feeling, and how successful was the night before. They may decide to run out to the club for a round of golf, and if so the pooch can go along for the ride. If they aren't going out to the club they wait until Eddie goes out to mail Helen's letter to Aunt Eustacia. Rover can tag along for the walk. If he wants to get out, there's his chance, but not a very sporting chance. Apartment houses and mail boxes in this town are closer together than the holes in a sergeant's socks.

Then there's the sporty type. Now here's a group that creates a lot of good clean fun for everyone! Even the dog gets a break. Here we usually find the young matron or career girl on her afternoon off. She reflects vim, vigor, vitality—and Harper's Bazaar. She rigs herself out in a tweed skirt, bright sweater, saddle shoes, and a peasant kerchief around her curls. The two adventurers set out for a jaunt through the park, bobbing along briskly, and pleasant to behold.

The fortunate canine having such a mistress senses the spirit of camaraderie that pervades these larks, and jumps and prances and frisks for joy at the prospect. He can lie down and roll in the grass, bark and yodel to his heart's content, or stop and sniff up an acquaintance with any other dog that happens along and seems in a friendly mood. The world is his bone! It's pleasant to have nice men stop and stroke his back and say kind things about him to his mistress. She tosses her head and laughs prettily, then bobs on.

And then we have the glamour girl. In this case the dog is merely stage property, the same as polaroids or a Dache bonnet. Rosita Royce has her doves. Miss Rand's girls whipped through a bit of badminton now and then. The glamour girls walk their dogs. Basically it's the same. They all have something to sell.

This dog walker never makes for the wide open spaces, or a pathway in the park. She heads for the avenue with a brace of greyhounds and stays on it. She floats gracefully along, reminding one of an advertisement for aircushion shoes, looking neither to the right nor the left, but maintaining an even, mink-coated course through a gallery of admiring eyes. When she has successfully navigated the predetermined course, she returns to her apartment and relinquishes the restless beasts to the competent hands of the family chauffeur. He will take them out into the park and see that they have a good run.

The sight of all this makes me want to go back to North Carolina. It makes me wonder how cities have held their own as long as they have. I want to go back to the country and raise hound dogs.

Prisoner Of Germany

By Ernest Lindley

Political And Actual Invasion Of Italy

IT IS almost physically impossible for Italy to drop out of the war formally by concluding a separate peace. Italy is a German prisoner. The Germans are believed to have at least eight divisions in Italy, in addition to the considerable part of their air force now concentrated in Sicily and southern Italy. The number of Gestapo agents spread through Italy is unknown, but is thought to number many thousands, and some of them are entrenched at key points in the government and industrial system. Some of the Italian factories have been operated with the aid of German engineers and even German foremen.

LINDLEY

But these facts do not subtract from the value of Prime Minister Churchill's appeal to the people of Italy to throw out Mussolini and to renew their historic ties of friendship with the English-speaking peoples. A similar appeal had been made on behalf of the American Government by Adolf A. Berle, jr., Assistant Secretary of State. Both the Prime Minister and Mr. Berle implied that the Italian people would be treated leniently if they respond to the Anglo-American plea. But Mr. Churchill also emphasized the dreadful consequences of failing to act on the plea: "Prolonged, scientific, and shattering air attack" on the whole of southern Italy as well as the north.

These attacks on the south will be launched after the Axis has been ejected from the spur of Tunisia. And in due course, they probably will be extended to central Italy as well. What these attacks can do is already known to the people of Genoa, Turin and Milan, where Italian official sources admit that the R. A. F. has inflicted huge damage. Evacuations of women and children, and even men, have begun, and these are believed to be on a large scale.

THE ITALIAN people have every reason, not only to be sick of the war, but to welcome a friendly embrace from the Allies. They have lost nearly all their African Empire and are about to lose the little that is left of it. It has been demonstrated, at least to the Italians of the north, that the Germans cannot defend Italian cities from destruction from the air. And now Anglo-American forces have arrived within easy bombing range to their south. Even those Italians who still believe that the war may end in a stalemate between Germany and the Allies, must contemplate the systematic destruction of Italy from the air and probably, in due course, an allied invasion which will make Italian soil a major battleground.

Italy is probably not strong enough to escape from its own bondage. It will have to be liberated by invasion. The purpose of the Allied political campaign is to make the Italians eager for liberation, or at least for escape from a war which has gained them nothing and which, if they continue to fight on the German side, is likely to become catastrophic. If enough Italians can be got into that state of mind, an Allied invasion can look forward to a sympathetic reception, at least from civilians, and possibly also from at least a portion of the armed forces.

EVEN BEFORE an invasion can be undertaken, it may be possible, by a combination of bombing with the underground political activity, to create extensive demoralization and perhaps to incite active unrest and sabotage.

Strictly military men warn against too much reliance on political warfare. That is to be expected. Plans for an invasion of Italy must be surveyed on the supposition that the Italian armed forces will resist vigorously, and with the full backing of the civilian population—until more concrete proof to the contrary appears.

But Italians who pay little heed now may change their minds as they are subjected to further jolts. The clearing of Tunisia and Tripoli by the Allied army may take some time. Until this has been achieved, the Anglo-American air force in Africa will not be able to concentrate its attention on the opposite shore, and even then it seems likely to encounter heavy German air reinforcements in Sicily and southern Italy. But, barring an unexpected disaster to our side, Italy's plight is bound to become progressively worse.

It would be foolhardy to count on the complete collapse of Italy, still less on an overturn in the government, in advance of an Allied invasion. But political warfare can bring immense gains at trifling cost. In this case it is almost certain to yield benefits, and these may suddenly pour forth with startling rapidity. As the line has been drawn by the American and British governments, the only Italians who need fear us are Mussolini and the top-men in the Fascist hierarchy.

Manpower In Britain

By Janet R. Keith

BRITAIN, with an active adult population of 33 million, has succeeded in placing 75 per cent of those adults in the armed forces, in war industry, or in work essential to the war effort. That is a pretty good record. As we on this continent proceed with the mobilization of manpower for war purposes, we should be able to profit in many ways from Britain's experience.

We shall probably find, as Britain did, that before we undertake any wholesale organized transference of workers to war industries we must take three preliminary steps. First, we must set up widespread controls governing employment. Second, we must decide exactly which industries have first claim on available workers. And, third, we must know exactly the extent of our own manpower resources.

The first step, that of setting up employment controls, has been introduced gradually in Britain. Hiring and firing of workers in large numbers of vital occupations is now subject to Government orders. Restrictions on the hiring of labor apply to all workers in building and civil engineering, general engineering industries, electrical installation, shipbuilding and repairing, coal mining, and also to all women between the ages of 18 and 30. All workers in these categories may find employment only through employment exchanges, and employers may engage workers only through employment exchanges.

Restrictions on dismissals and leaving employment cover about seven million workers in important munitions and nonmunitions industries. These workers are "frozen" in their jobs, unless a national service officer can be convinced that there is a good reason why they should leave. Better wages alone are not sufficient grounds for permission to change jobs. Women are sometimes granted a permit on the grounds of household responsibilities; with men the grounds are usually health considerations or opportunity to use special skills better elsewhere. Each case is considered on its individual merits.

The chief criticism of these employment controls has been that they tend to immobilize labor too much. The government feels that this defect can be remedied, not by abolishing the controls but by improving the machinery for moving workers from one job to another.

First claim on labor supply was given at first to those types of munitions production with a high priority rating. But it soon became apparent that production bottlenecks and labor bottlenecks had to be treated separately. Late in 1941 a subcommittee of the Labor Supply Coordinating Committee was formed for the purpose of drawing up every two weeks a list of individual firms (engaged in important war work) which are most in need of labor. These firms then have first claim on available labor. In addition to these lists of vacancies drawn up by this committee there are "bottleneck vacancies," key vacancies which must be filled immediately. They are circulated to all regions of the country and must be given priority over all other vacancies.

For purposes of transferring and placing women workers the country is divided into "color areas." Scarlet areas are those in which the supply of women workers does not meet existing demands, and which must therefore import women workers. Red areas are those in which supply of women workers balances demand. Green and amber areas are those which have a surplus of mobile women available for transfer. All women in scarlet and red areas are placed locally in preference vacancies. Women in green and amber areas are exported to fill preference vacancies in scarlet areas.

In order to determine her exact manpower resources, Britain has carried out compulsory registration of workers, both by occupation and age groups. The occupational registrations were chiefly for the purpose of discovering skilled workers who might be transferred to jobs where their skill would be of more benefit to the war effort. Men in the armed forces and men already in vital work were exempt from these registrations.

To date those registered by age group have been men over military service age and women between 18 and 45 (exclusive of those in auxiliaries of the armed forces). Compulsory registration has proven itself to be the only way of getting a complete labor picture, particularly with regard to reserves of womanpower.

Psychological War

By Paul Schubert

Assault On Axis Nerves

IN GOING over to the offensive in the European theater of the war, we are not neglecting "war of nerves"—the warfare which uses ideas as missiles, and which on one or two occasions has cracked great and powerful nations wide open long before their military establishments' equivalent defeat.

SCHUBERT

The Axis has used "war of nerves" too, on many occasions both during and before the war, notably against the French.

As used by the Axis, this weapon has taken a most malevolent form. Instead of appealing to the better instincts of the nation addressed—to hope, wisdom and reason—the Axis has used an evil, debasing combination of terror and undermining falsehood. Rumor and threat are the Axis instruments. The goal is to create panic, to destroy unity and organization, to blast faith in leaders, in allies—even in self.

As a counterpart to this "war of nerves" the Axis has penetrated the attacked nation with secret agents spreading corruption—seeking out venal politicians and buying their support, discovering the Quislings whose personal ambition and vanity is willing to profit even by the downfall and disgrace of their fellow-countrymen.

AXIS "war of nerves" seeks out human weakness, takes advantage of decency for purposes of betrayal, stops at nothing in its foul eagerness to conquer.

Of all the documents of Axis "war of nerves," none is more revealing than the letter addressed by Hitler to Marshal Petain a few days ago, a letter not content to state the plain facts of the latest Axis betrayal of oft-betrayed France — but seeking to turn that very betrayal into an Axis "war of nerves," to divide France still further, to make the French blame their own leaders for this new German shamelessness. Above all, seeking acceptance of the doctrine that the occupation of France by Germany is for France's own good.

Never in the long history of Europe have the French people been so contemptuously insulted as in this false and hypocritical document.

By contrast, our own war of nerves is refreshing in its blunt candor.

We make no bones about our platform. We intend to secure the military defeat of Germany and Italy and the overthrow of their present dictatorships. We consider that both Hitler and Mussolini, in their public utterances over a score of years, have demonstrated their complete unfitness and unwillingness to lead a Germany and Italy cooperating fairly as partners in a world of international cooperation.

We intend to win the war by doing whatever it takes to win it. We know that our strength is not yet great enough to secure immediate crushing military victory—but our strength is rising, and we know that it will rise to the point that makes crushing military victory possible.

We intend to explore the possibilities of our aerial weapons far beyond the point of aerial attack so far reached. We have been told by our aerial experts that ultimately, if we keep on increasing our numbers of aircraft and their bomb capacity, we should be able to wipe out all enemy centers of war production, of war transport, and of war leadership.

This will inevitably involve the destruction of the enemy's historic cities—and that is that.

The enemy may as well know now, what is coming.

THERE IS nothing new about our proclamation of this plan. It is no secret and no falsehood. We have told it to all the world for many months—and our present offensive actions are merely confirmations of earlier statements that now prove to have been, not threats but promises.

Throughout much of this year, Germany's cities felt the blows of our growing aerial attack.

We of the general public have no idea as to whether this attack has made itself felt, militarily, in a reduction of the Axis war potential.

We do know that the attack now appears to be shifting to Italy, for obvious reasons. At even less cost than we are accustomed to paying, we have smashed Genoa and Turin. Other cities are to come.

The remarks addressed by Prime Minister Churchill to the Italian people during the course of his broadcast to the world last Sunday, were typical of our brand of "war of nerves."

The Prime Minister merely told the truth.

Some day the enemy will begin to realize that we are telling the truth.

Imaginary Dialogue

("Twenty million Americans who never paid income taxes before will have to pay them March 15 next, and considerable difficulty is expected in getting the money. A poll has indicated that many who now come under the income tax do not even know it yet."—News item.)

Tax man—What are you planning to do about your tax?

Citizen—Me? I always pay it when I buy the cigarettes?

Tax man—Not that tax; I mean the income tax.

Citizen—Oh, that one! The rich pay that. It's none of my concern.

Tax man—It is from now on. Everybody getting over $20 a week has to fork over.

Citizen—Quit your kidding, mister.

Tax man—I'm not kidding. Don't you read the papers?

Citizen—Yeah, but they don't put any tax news on them sports pages.

Tax man—What do you get a week?

Citizen—About $30.

Tax man—You'll have to pay $181.

Citizen—I never get ahead that much.

Tax man—You'll have to dig it up this time.

Citizen—How?

Tax man—That's your headache. Don't you ever save anything?

Citizen—No. The Government will have to wait. I got too many bills in ahead of it.

Tax man—You realize that the Government comes first?

Citizen—Sure. First in war, first in peace, last on the list of bill collectors.

Tax man—You realize, of course, that a war has to be paid for; don't you understand that Uncle Sam has to get the money somewhere?

Citizen—I haven't been bothered so far. Why worry me now?

Tax man—The expense is greater than ever. Isn't it up to every citizen to come across?

Citizen—It's a great idea. All I'm saying is that I haven't got a dime ahead. They'll have to get it from those guys who have saved a little.

Tax man—Do you realize that there are 20 million being asked for the first time to pay this tax?

Citizen—They ain't all got my expenses.

Tax man—Don't you want to do your part to pay for the war?

Citizen—Sure, but they can't get blood out of a turnip.

Tax man—Do you want 'em around trying that kind of a vegetable test on you?

Citizen—No, but listen: If I ain't got $181 I ain't got it, that's all.

Tax man—Maybe so, but you'll have to come across some way.

Citizen—Can't my ward boss fix it up?

Tax man—Nobody can fix it so you don't pay your income tax. But the Treasury has announced that it will lend you the money to pay the tax.

Citizen (quite startled)—You mean that if it's got to have money from me it will lend me the dough to pay it? Then where does it gain anything?

Tax man—It charges you 6 per cent interest on the loan.

Citizen—If I ain't got enough to pay the original tax where am I going to pay back the loan with interest?

Tax man—You worry to much!

The Party Chairman

By Mark Sullivan

What He Should Do

NEXT MONDAY at St. Louis the Republican National Committee will meet to elect a new national chairman of the party. About the possible choice there is some newspaper mention of names and there is some advocacy of candidates by individuals and groups. Some of the Republican press and some Republican leaders, including Mr. Wendell Willkie, oppose one candidate because they think he is too nearly isolationist on foreign relations. But there is no crystallizing behind any candidate. The choice will be made at St. Louis on Monday by the 100-odd members of the committee.

SULLIVAN

In all this, the public should be interested. The public would be still more interested if it understood clearly the place that a national chairman, of either party, has in the mechanism of American politics and American governmental action.

With us, the two-party system of government is almost as deeply imbedded in our national tradition as the formal institutions set up by our written Constitution. In the election last month, out of 435 members elected to the House of Representatives—that is, the whole of the House—431 were either Democrats or Republicans. Only four were members of third parties. Yet the past 12 years of depression, commotion, and finally war, have been a time when third parties should have flourished—if third parties in America are ever possible. The fact of history is that America is a two-party country. Only once in 50 years have third parties had as many as 18 members of the House—usually less than ten, sometimes none. To put it another way, for over 50 years at least, 96 per cent of the House has always been Republicans and Democrats, usually over 98 per cent, sometimes 100 per cent.

SINCE we are a two-party country, it follows that the mechanisms through which our parties function are important. The mechanism in both parties is the national committee. This is not a mere informal group of party leaders. The national committee, in its makeup and functioning, is firmly rooted in our democratic and representative processes. A national committee is made up in this way: Every four years, in years of Presidential elections, voters of both parties go to primary elections which have sanction of law and are safeguarded by law. The voters elect delegates to the national convention. There delegates, in each State, by a representative process, elect the members of the national committee—two from each State, a man and a woman. The national committee in turn elects a national chairman. When a chairman resigns, the committee comes together to elect a new one. This is the case of the Republicans next Monday.

By a custom, usually followed, a national chairman, of either party, should follow certain rules, and carefully practice certain avoidances.

He should not be a friend of any candidate for the Presidential nomination—nor the opponent of any. Toward all aspirants he should maintain as even-handed an impartiality as a judge in a courtroom. This rule was put into an aphorism by one of the best heads either party ever had, Mr. Will Hays, now of the motion-picture industry: "A national chairman's business is not to select a Presidential candidate but elect him."

IN THE same spirit, a national chairman should not favor, nor oppose, any school of thought about which there is difference in the party. He should not concern himself at all with policy or ideology. He should concern himself with organization solely, with the processes that result in getting the maximum party vote to the polls. Observance of this rule helped make Mr. James A. Farley one of the best national chairmen either party ever had. For eight years, Mr. Farley was national chairman of the Democratic Party at a time when the party's thought was divided, to an extent of bitterness, between orthodox democracy and the innovations of the Roosevelt Administration. Ignoring that, Mr. Farley dedicated himself to party organization only, with extraordinary success.

Spokesmanship of party thought, debate about party thought, is for others—for party members in Congress, for party leaders in public life, such as the party's one ex-President, Mr. Hoover; for the party's two former candidates for President, Mr. Wendell Willkie and ex-Governor Alf M. Landon; and for such others, of whatever rank, as have the urge to speak. From such discussion, a national chairman is expected to abstain.

There will be much of this sort of discussion among Republican leaders during the 18 months until the next national convention is held, and the next Presidential candidate nominated. The Republicans will need to decide how much of the Roosevelt Administration's program of domestic innovation they wish to retain. In the field of foreign policy, nearly all Republicans are willing to follow President Roosevelt's peace program to the extent of setting up a mechanism for permanent peace. But many Republicans will dissent from the farther reaches of Vice President Wallace's plan for a new world-wide economic order.

U.S. Fliers Bomb Andaman Isles

By the Associated Press

New Delhi, Dec. 1.—American heavy bombers flew hundreds of miles across the Bay of Bengal yesterday to assault the Japanese-occupied Andaman Islands for the first time since enemy warships there were dealt a punishing blow by Flying Fortresses on April 3.

Coupled with this heavy assault, made by daylight, was a fiery raid last night upon the docks and warehouses at Rangoon, the Burmese port.

One of the attacking bombers failed to return from these operations.

The Andaman raid was concentrated against Port Blair where a 250-foot naval auxiliary was hit.

In the previous American raid on the Andamans, Fortresses under the leadership of Maj. Gen. Lewis H. Brereton, now in the Middle East, set a Japanese cruiser and troopship afire and probably damaged other ships, shortly after the Japanese had seized the islands.

Docks Area Raided

With the American Forces in China, Dec. 1 (AP).—American bombers and fighters based in China moved in, without any Japanese opposition from the air, to deal heavy damage two days ago to power, dock and coal-loading machinery of Campho-Port, largest Japanese coaling base on the French Indo-China coast.

Yule Club Savings Total 6 Millions

With purses swollen from a year of saving approximately six million dollars, more than 70,000 Washington residents will have the wherewithal today for a splurge of Christmas shopping.

Checks totaling this sum were mailed out yesterday by 22 banks which maintained Christmas savings clubs this year.

Although the already crowded stores will probably feel the increased trade, it is expected that many club members will use their savings to pay increased income taxes.

Petroleum Gas Users Warned to Build Up Reserve

By the Associated Press

Farmers who use liquefied petroleum gas as a fuel were urged by the War Production Board yesterday to build up supplies of the fuel on their own premises.

WPB said that building up reserves in homes and business places would afford protection against winter shortages of butane and propane gas when consumption of these fuels hits its peak later in the winter.

Supplies of the fuels for the Army, Navy and war industries now are taxing the storing space of refineries and distributors, WPB said. However, private consumers will be unable to rely on regular deliveries through the winter and "cannot any longer safely buy on a hand-to-mouth basis."

The Gallup Poll

Recent Congressional Prohibition Flurries Increase Public Opposition to Any Dry Step

By George Gallup

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., Dec. 1.—All the efforts of prohibitionists to tighten liquor restrictions in this war have so far had little effect among the great majority of voters.

Shortly after the recent Congressional flurry aimed at putting prohibition into effect in and around Army camps, the Institute made another coast-to-coast survey on the question of national prohibition to spot any trend toward increased dry sentiment such as occurred during World War I.

Dry Sentiment Dips

The effect of recent activity, if any, has been to increase opposition to national prohibition, for the most recent poll actually discloses a 2-point decline in dry sentiment.

Here are the question and the findings of those with opinions:

"If the question of national prohibition should come up again, would you vote wet, or dry?"

Wet	64%
Dry	36%

Eight per cent of those questioned had no opinion. None of the Institute studies conducted so far since Pearl Harbor support the view that this war will provide the same impetus to prohibition which the last war did.

Here is a table showing the trend of sentiment since this country's entrance into the war:

	Dry	Wet
Feb., 1942	36%	64%
Sept., 1942	38	62
Today	36	64

The failure of the dry forces to make any appreciable gain in sentiment for another try at national prohibition does not necessarily mean antiprohibitionist groups have nothing to worry about. For the Institute studies deal only with national prohibition sentiment. In many communities throughout the country there exist local majorities in favor of prohibition.

As a matter of fact, the dry forces have been making gradual gains all along. In 34 of the 48 States local prohibition laws affect at least some part of the population. A few observers, pointing to these local laws, contend that a substantial part of the country may eventually be dry, even though there be no national prohibition law.

The General Trend

Institute studies disclose sentiment on the question of national prohibition has up to this time followed a consistent pattern. One, women have been consistently more in favor of prohibition than men. Two, the South has been "drier" than any other section of the country. Three, the older people are, the more they have been inclined to favor prohibition. Four, the larger the city, the less dry sentiment has been found.

The following tables of comparison bear out this pattern:

	Dry	Wet
Men	29%	71%
Age—
21—29	29%	71%
30—49	32	68
50 and over	46	54
Sections—

East Central	35	65
West Central	42	58

City-Farm—
Farms	49%	51%
Cities under 10,000	48	52
Cities from 10,000 to 100,000	32	68

The WASHINGTON Merry-Go-Round

By Drew Pearson

Mrs. Roosevelt's Visit to Queen Mother

IN INTIMATE White House circles Mrs. Roosevelt has told how the highlight of her recent visit to the British Isles was a night spent with England's much-loved Queen Mother.

Queen Mary, who is just as active as was the late Mrs. Sara Delano Roosevelt, reminded Mrs. Franklin Roosevelt very much of her mother-in-law. Despite her age, she took the hardships of the war completely in her stride, though apologizing for not being able to receive Mrs. Roosevelt at her palace, Sandringham, now devoted to war purposes. Queen Mary's present home is kept secret.

DREW PEARSON

"She met me there," Mrs. Roosevelt told White House friends in describing the highlights of her trip, "and took me upstairs. There were strips of white tape to mark the edges of the stairs in the dark—for the English are saving light just as they are saving fuel.

"She showed me to a room, a vast cold room, which made me realize how much we had to learn when it comes to saving oil. At the far end of the room was a dim light burning. At second glance, I realized it was a fire in the fireplace."

But it proved to be the wrong room after all. On opening the door, the Queen observed that the Princess Royal was occupying the same suite, and although Mrs. Roosevelt insisted that she could fit in anywhere, the Queen showed her to other quarters.

British Baths

"SHE OPENED ANOTHER DOOR," recounted the First Lady, "and we were greeted by a blast of cold air that felt as if it had come from Greenland! But there we stayed, and what's more, I summoned up my courage and took a bath."

Despite the evidences of war economy on the part of the royal family, dinner that evening was "frightfully formal." After dinner Queen Mary suggested: "I understand that your husband is interested in forestry."

"Yes," replied Mrs. Roosevelt, "Franklin likes trees."

"Then perhaps you would like to come into the drawing room and see some photographs of forestry?"

Queen Mary showed her, among other things, a picture which she gave the visitor to take home to "your husband." It was a photograph of the Queen herself, standing beside a group of British huskies, axes in hand, about to fell a giant tree. The Queen dressed in coat, gloves and plumed hat, pressed her fingers to a great saw.

Conversation turned to the Queen Mother's war work. She was particularly interested in giving soldiers a lift in her car. For this the government allowed her extra petrol.

Once, Queen Mary said, she had given a lift to a soldier who proved to be an American.

"He said the strangest thing to me," remarked the Queen, in relating the incident to Mrs. Roosevelt. "When I dropped him, I said, 'Do you know who I am?' And he replied, 'You've got me there.' Now what on earth does that mean, Mrs. Roosevelt?"

Mrs. Roosvelt translated.

The First Lady tells friends that seeing how Queen Mary adapted herself to war-torn England made her understand better than ever the resolute determination of the British people, and also why they adored the Queen Mother.

John L. Lewis Slows Down

FORMER NEWSMAN EDWARD HEBERT, now Congressman from Louisiana, is a stickler for the 35-mile-an-hour war speed limit, believes everybody should be the same. Driving to the Capitol from his home in Virginia, another machine whizzed by Hebert.

"Wonder if that fellow has heard about the rubber shortage?" mused Hebert. Stepping on the gas, he pulled alongside the speeder. It was none other than labor tycoon John L. Lewis.

Lewis, who lives in Alexandria, Va., stared back at Hebert briefly, sensed the situation, and took his foot off the accelerator. The rest of the way to Washington, Lewis kept within the speed limit, Congressman Hebert hugging his rear.

Two-Fisted Jeffers

Rubber Czar Bill Jeffers lived up to his two-fisted reputation when testifying at a closed meeting of the House Interstate Commerce Subcommittee which was probing the need of Nation-wide gas rationing.

Jeffers bluntly told the subcommittee, headed by Representative Clinton P. Anderson of New Mexico that congressional efforts to block the rationing program would get nowhere.

WILLIAM JEFFERS

"I understand the position of you gentlemen, but I want you also to understand mine," said the rubber administrator. "My job is to carry out the recommendations of the Baruch report and I intend to do it."

Jeffers said he hoped to keep the Nation "on rubber," so we will have sufficient transportation for workers in war industries. Nation-wide gas rationing is an essential step in this direction," he added, "and I'm all for it."

The rubber boss was questioned closely on whether Leon Henderson was cooperating with him. He replied that it was difficult to be the price administrator and also handle rationing, since the two things are contradictory. As price chief, Henderson was supposed to protect the public, while as rationing director he is depriving the public of something, Jeffers explained.

Several members of the subcommittee continued to fire leading questions about Henderson, hoping Jeffers would take a poke at the OPA boss. They pointed out that it was Henderson who had initiated the Nation-wide gas rationing program and that the Rubber Administration and the Office of Defense Transportation were forced to go along, whether they approved of the program or not.

"I guess you were the victim of a cigar that was too big to be chewed," commented Representative Hatton Sumners of Texas.

"What do you mean?" shot back Jeffers. "I can chew a pretty big one."

"You misunderstood Mr. Sumners," broke in L. D. Tompkins, Jeffers' assistant, "By cigar he meant Leon Henderson." The rubber boss laughed but made no comment.

With Shirley Povich

For as long as it lasts, pug-faced Steve O'Neill has one of the choice managerial jobs in the big leagues. When he succeeded Del Baker as manager of the Detroit Tigers last week, O'Neill vaulted into the big dough. The Detroit Club is free-handed with its pay roll.

POVICH

The Tigers' angel is Walter O. Briggs, sr., who, before he began to build Army tanks, operated the second-biggest auto body building plant in the country. The Detroit ball club has been his toy. Mickey Cochrane used to draw down $40,000 as a Tiger manager. As a coach, Del Baker used to draw more salary than many managers in the big leagues.

There are other nice items about managing the Tigers. Briggs unfurls his bankroll at the drop of a hint that a certain player is wanted by a Detroit manager. A couple of years ago Baker said he'd like to have Dutch Meyer, a second-baseman in the Texas League. Briggs peeled off $40,000 and bought him. Meyer was a flop, but nobody cried.

When young Dick Wakefield was hitting home runs for the University of Michigan a couple of seasons ago, nine big league clubs bid for him. But it was never any contest. Briggs had him sewed up for the Tigers, with an offer to give him $5000 more than any other club offered him. The Tigers ended up paying $55,000 for a college outfielder who didn't own as much as an hour's experience in organized baseball.

It's a nice sort of spot for a manager, that Detroit job. Dough is no object to the rich Mr. Briggs. For years, his general manager, Jack Zeller, has been traipsing around the league trying to buy up accredited stars that he'd like to have on his ball team. When Zeller broached a trade, it was always clear that the Tigers would be willing to add cash to the deal. Joe Smith for Joe Dokes "and cash" was always the Tiger offer. In 1940 Zeller offered the Nats $125,000 and three ball players for Dutch Leonard and Buddy Lewis.

The only drawback to the Detroit job is the risk of getting fired. That happens to a Tiger manager. Mickey Cochrane won two pennants and never finished worse than second over a stretch of four seasons, but midway in the fifth he was very abruptly discharged. That's when Del Baker got the job.

It was presumed that Baker was doing all right with the Tigers before he was fired. In 1940, when the cry was "Break up the Yankees," Baker demonstrated that was quite unnecessary when he led the Tigers to the pennant and saved the American League from resolving itself into another farce. Then he lost Hank Greenberg to the Army, and he didn't do so well these past two seasons. Last week he got the axe.

Sacked along with Baker, incidentally, was Merv Shea, the Tigers' Coach. Nice fellow, Shea, and the best golfer in major league baseball with trophies to prove it. With the riddance of Shea and Baker, the Tigers lose the distinction of being the best sign-stealing club in the big leagues. For years Baker was credited with being the No. 1 sign-thief in baseball, which was no drawback to the Tigers, but in recent seasons it has been acknowledged that Shea was even a more skillful purloiner of signs than Baker.

Most everybody in baseball likes Steve O'Neill. He has been around for a long time. He looks more like an old-time catcher than any man we ever saw. His gnarled fingers bear witness to long years behind the bat and his broken nose might indicate that there were times when he didn't deign to use a mask. He's a product of the coal mine district of Pennsylvania, a big, muscular fellow whose mildness of manner is, however, completely disarming.

O'Neil is one of the few men who ever walked into an enemy dressing room spoiling for a fight and wasn't obliged. That happened a half dozen years ago when he was manager of Cleveland and the Nats were the visiting club. With the Nats was Carl Fischer, a big left-handed pitcher whom O'Neil had traded to Washington a few weeks before. During pregame practice Fischer, from the Washington bench, undertook to razz O'Neill.

Into the Washington dressing room at the end of the practice stomped big Steve in an angry mood. He addressed himself to the Washington team. "Listen, you fellows, there's one man in here I want to fight. I haven't got any quarrel with the rest of you." He spied Fischer on the rubbing table.

The rest of the Nats stood aside as O'Neill grabbed Fischer by the throat and demanded he stand up and fight. Ordinarily, an opposition manager alone in a club's dressing room trying to make trouble would have been mobbed. But as we were saying, everybody likes O'Neill. They let him have it out with Fischer. It was no contest. O'Neill had his revenge, turned on his heel, mumbled, "Thanks, fellows," and walked back across the hall to the Cleveland clubhouse.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

Sporting Around:

New York, Dec. 1.—Sergt. Joe Louis has sent a mild request to Mike Jacobs. He wants 2000 pairs of boxing gloves, the $12 kind, to distribute at Christmas.

Wonder if the bowl games and bowl teams could be shamed into giving a part of their share to charity? Just asking them to cough up wouldn't be enough . . . There's still some talk of the Phils' franchise going to Baltimore, which scouts the old notion the Phils couldn't sink lower . . . Elaborate efforts to explain that Bill Terry resigned make it appear that he was unloaded. Mel Ott will become acting president of the Giants while Horace Stoneham is in uniform.

CONSIDINE

Branch Rickey let drop a soggy hint that he'll slash the salary of John McDonald, traveling secretary of the Dodgers and a fine young baseball man. "Don't you realize that so and so, the traveling secretary of the such and such makes only $2500 a year?" Rickey intoned to John in his ministerial manner. John had a polite answer. "Don't you know that Eddie Brannick, the traveling secretary of the Giants, makes $12,500?" he asked . . . Navy went through Army's line like a knife through custard, after Bob Olds, 200-pound Army tackle from Spokane, and honorary captain of the 1943 team, went out of the game early with a busted nose.

Remember that game named football? It's still being played. The big game Saturday will be Notre Dame vs. Great Lakes, at Soldier Field in Chicago . . . Bob Feller is soon to see active service . . . Dutch Clark thinks the Bears have a better line than backfield but most of the team's victims say that there's no difference. One is a blackjack and the other is a baseball bat . . . Fred Benham suggests that a square in New York be named Rickenbacker Plaza and that a memorial be set up therein to honor aviation heroes . . . Boxing is having one of its best years in New York, but the boys are afraid that the Bivins-Savold thing might have curdled it until its aroma subsides.

I don't recognize half the names on the All-America teams I've seen so far . . . Add similes: Bigger than the by-line of a politician on a street excavation notice . . . Fellow writes in and suggests a super-super game between the Bears and an all-Navy team, which could field such players as Evashevski, Albert, McAfee, Bruce Smith, Blandin, Odson, Suffridge, Svendson, Goodreault, Kutner, Poole, etc., etc. . . . P. S.: It won't come off . . . Wonder how Comdr. John Whelchel, the Navy coach, ever got around to explaining those doleful predictions that his team would be run off the field by Army? . . . Jimmy Bivins started out as a featherweight, and some customers left the Garden last Friday night wishing he had stood in the feathers . . . Isabelle Parks, the incorrigible Yankee rooter, writes in to scowl at my Thanksgiving piece saying sports fans should be grateful for a team like the Cards. Naturally, Parks is excepted.

Comdr. Tom Hamilton, head of Navy preflight training, finally got off a blast at Comdr. Gene Tunney's program, in a message to New York football writers. "We are looking for a much more virile race," he said in defense of his team theories which Tunney decried, "and it won't come from calistentics, or jogging, or other exercises where the incentive to excel is not present" . . . Too bad those interesting grid writers' meetings ended. It would have been nice to invite Denny Myers back again and hear what happened to his wonder team when it played Holy Cross . . . "My team is a coach's dream," Denny said proudly.

Del Baker was manager of the Tigers three years, led his team in the pennant that stopped the Yankee string and the club made money the other two years. So he's fired. Connie Mack, who had finished in the cellar more than all the other managers combined, is generally regarded as the best in the business . . . Challedon has gone to stud at Ira Drymon's farm in Kentucky, which should disturb fanciers of Maryland farms . . . Ohio State drew 307,204 customers in five games at Columbus to take the box office championship of the country.

Second Spot Is Captured By Georgia

Wisconsin Awarded Third; B. C. Ranked Eighth; Tulsa Gets Fourth in AP Poll

By the Associated Press

New York, Dec. 1.—The Western Conference champion, as usual, is on top of the Nation's football heap. When Ohio State whipped the Iowa Navy Preflight team, 41-12, last Saturday while Holy Cross was wiping out Boston College, 55-12, the sports experts participating in the Associated Press ranking poll were sufficiently impressed to vote the Buckeyes into first place and drop B. C. to eighth.

In the final tabulation of the 1942 season, Ohio State is credited with 1432 points, the highest final total in the history of the Associated Press poll. They were picked for first place by 84 of the 156 voters and top second-place Georgia by 93 points. Georgia received 62 first-place votes, while Wisconsin and undefeated Tulsa drew 4 apiece and William and Mary and Holy Cross 1 each.

Fourth Big Ten Champ on Top

Ohio State is the fourth Big Ten champion to receive the sports writers' accolade as national champion since 1936. Minnesota finished on top that year and again in 1940 and 1941. Pittsburgh in 1937, Texas Christian in 1938 and Texas A. and M. in 1939 broke up the Midwest monopoly.

Boston College's 43-point defeat cost the Eagles 593 points in the voting. Last week they were given first place with 1078 points while Ohio State had just advanced to third with 904.

The final 1942 rankings of the teams (first place votes in parentheses, points figured on 10-9-8-7 etc. basis):

First Ten

Ohio State (84)	1432
Georgia (62)	1339
Wisconsin (4)	983
Tulsa (4)	936
Georgia Tech	705
Notre Dame	590
Tennessee	533
Boston College	485
Michigan	467
Alabama	234

The second ten is made up of Texas, 137; Stanford, 72; University of California at Los Angeles, 54; William and Mary (1), 39; Santa Clara, 32; Auburn, 25; Washington State, 24; Mississippi State, 22; Minnesota, Holy Cross (1) and Penn State, 19 points each. Other votes were cast for Illinois, 18; Indiana, 12; Pennsylvania, 9; Hardin-Simmons, 5; Rice, 5; Navy, 4; Louisiana State, 3; Army, 3; Amherst, 2; Iowa, 2; North Carolina, 1; Fordham, 1; and Missouri, 1.

Bucks Always Among Leaders

Throughout the season the Big Ten champions were rated somewhere in the first ten, starting at the top, dropping as far as tenth place following their midseason defeat by Wisconsin, then climbing back as they whipped Pitt, Illinois, Michigan and the Iowa Seahawks in their last four games. Georgia also was among the leaders throughout the season.

Six of the ten teams have been selected to play in New Year's Day bowl games. Georgia will oppose the Pacific Coast Conference champion in the Rose Bowl at Pasadena, Calif.; Tulsa and Tennessee will clash in the New Orleans Sugar Bowl; Georgia Tech will play Texas in the Dallas Cotton Bowl and Boston College and Alabama will meet in the Miami Orange Bowl. The three Big Ten teams and Notre Dame are barred from considering postseason games by their rules. Notre Dame still has a regular scheduled game with the Great Lakes Naval Training Station Saturday.

A. G. O. Wins, 41-12

The A. G. O. Adjutants swept to a 41-12 triumph over A. A. F. C. last night in the Y. M. C. A. Government Baseball League. Northcut led the victors with 16 points.

Irish Charged With Playing 'Dirty Football'

By the Associated Press

Palo Alto, Calif., Dec. 1.—Notre Dame was accused today of "dirty football" tactics in its game with Stanford at South Bend October 10.

The charges were made by Ed Stamm, star Stanford tackle and president of the student body, who said he was not surprised Notre Dame players reportedly used similar tactics in the rough game between the Ramblers and Southern California, in Los Angeles last Saturday.

Three Notre Dame and two Southern California players were expelled from the contest for unbecoming conduct.

Stamm's opinions came to light during check of a report that Stanford players had signed a petition seeking cancellation of the 1943 game with Notre Dame. No such petition was discovered, and Stanford officials and players scoffed at the rumor.

However, Stamm said: "Notre Dame played dirty football against us this season, and you can quote me as saying so. It didn't surprise me that Notre Dame, according to reports, used the same tactics against U. S. C.

"The fact is we had warned U. S. C. what to expect, but there is no talk at Stanford of calling off next year's game with Notre Dame. We figure the fellows here can take care of themselves and dish it out just as well as they can take it."

Philadelphia, Dec. 1 (AP).—Bob Montgomery climbed back into the lightweight boxing picture tonight by pounding out a decisive 10-round decision over Maxie Shapiro of New York before 7,500 at the arena. The decision was unanimous.

Scoring in Football Shows Big Increase

By the Associated Press

New York, Dec. 1.—As a part of a topsy-turvy gridiron season in which it was not unusual to see the underdog run wild against its more highly regarded foe, the Nation's college football teams went on a scoring spree unequaled since 1930.

The twenty-first Associated Press analysis of scoring figures today revealed that 193 teams, scoring 24,081 points in 1601 games, averaged 15.04 points. This rate of slightly more than two touchdowns a game is an increase of one-half point over last season and the highest since the college boys averaged 16 points 12 years ago.

The record of 19 points per contest was hung up in 1922—the first year the survey was conducted.

Team Average Jumps

Along with the increase in the average scoring per game, the team average for the season also took a decided jump, going up to 124.77 points, the highest since 1931 and a decided boost over 1940 when the average was 116.25. In 1931 the figure was 124.7.

Only two sections of the country, however, showed an increase in average scoring per game. Midwestern colleges, on the basis of 327 games played by 37 schools, tallied 19.41 points as compared with 17.96 last year and had a team average for the season of 171.51 as against 150.05 in 1941.

The Rocky Mountain area elevens boosted their average per game from 12.30 to 15.70 and their team figures from 97.58 to 130.14. The South came close to last year's figures with a decline of only a fraction of a point, but the East, Southwest, and Pacific Coast fell way off.

Season's Best Average

Of all the teams in the survey, little undefeated Missouri Valley of Marshall, Mo., compiled the best average with 391 points in 9 games for an average of 43.44. The Missourians, however, were topped in total scoring by unbeaten Tulsa. The Golden Herricanes, who will clash with Tennessee in the Sugar Bowl on New Year's Day, rolled up 427 points in 10 contests for an average of 42.7.

Williams, whipped only by Amherst, was the leader in the East with an average of 32 points in eight games, for a figure that beat Rochester's 30.2 and Boston College's 29. Georgia, headed for the Rose Bowl, led the South with an average of 33.36 points on 367 points in 11 games.

Colorado led the Rocky Mountain area with 27.88; Texas the Southwest section with 21.1 and Stanford the West Coast with 20.4.

Next Season's Classic Set For July 7

Game Again to Aid In Ball, Bat Fund; Other Business Left For Joint Meeting

By Judson Bailey
Associated Press Sports Writer

Chicago, Dec. 1.—The major leagues set their 1943 All-Star spectacle today for Philadelphia's Shibe Park on Wednesday, July 7, and wrestled with many other problems, including night baseball and the operation of the Phils in the National League next year.

The All-Star game will be played again for baseball's "ball and bat" fund for servicemen and will be the American League's home game. Whether a second contest in the manner of last year's clash with a team of service stars at Cleveland would be played was not yet known, the presidents of the two major leagues said.

All plans for a war-time program for baseball were left for action at a joint meeting to be presided over by Commissioner Kenesaw M. Landis on Thursday.

Phils Still Present Problem

The National League's afternoon session was devoted largely to probing into the plight of the Phils, although President Ford Frick said he doubted that a solution could be found during the meetings.

Frick said that he did hope the value of the franchise could be determined tomorrow and that the league had received expressions of interest from bidders. In this connection, he said, "I'd like to make it clear that there never have been any hard feelings between Gerry Nugent (president of the club) and the rest of the league. Nugent is perfectly willing to get out if we can find a satisfactory solution."

Frick also disclosed that at the board of directors' meeting yesterday a plan was considered which definitely provided a place where "Bill Terry could fit into the picture," but said the discussion today had closed this particular avenue.

Idea Defined

This did not mean Terry, who resigned yesterday as farm director of the New York Giants, might not turn up at Philadelphia, he said, but only that the particular proposition that the league had in mind yesterday was dead.

"As a matter of fact," he continued, "we are working along three specific lines now and I don't know which one of them we will decide to follow. Naturally we are putting the most drastic at the bottom. And we haven't reached the point where we are considering names. All we are doing now is trying to find the proper man."

Because of the Phils' problem the National League did not elect a new slate of directors today. Frick said it was considered advisable to let the present board, consisting of Horace Stoneham of the Giants, Robert Quinn of the Boston Braves, Phil Wrigley of the Chicago Cubs and William Benswanger of the Pittsburgh Pirates, continue in office until the matter is settled.

Issue Carried Over

The two leagues ran into disagreement again this year on the number of night games a club would be permitted to play and this issue was carried over to the joint meeting. The National League voted for a limit of seven games and the Cincinnati Reds announced that no matter how many might be authorized, they would play more than seven.

The American League voted against a request by Clark Griffith of the Washington Senators that each club be permitted to play as many as it pleased, but agreed to back him in the joint meeting for 28 games for Washington and set a maximum of 14 for other clubs.

Athletic Head At Harvard To Enter Army

Cambridge, Mass., Dec. 1.—William J. Bingham, athletic director at Harvard University for 22 years, tonight was granted a leave of absence so he can join the United States Army as a major.

One of Harvard's greatest middle-distance runners, Bingham served 23 months in World War I, enlisting as a private and leaving with a captaincy and a Croix de Guerre.

"As in the case of Richard E. Harlow (football coach who became a lieutenant commander in the Navy) the leave was granted to meet Mr. Bingham's desire to join the armed services," a university announcement said.

"As in Mr. Harlow's case, it is confidently expected that Bingham will return to his post after the war."

The university said that the leaves granted Harlow and the 53-year-old Bingham did not mean there would be a change in Harvard's collegiate athletic program in the immediate future. It said "the physical training staff of the Harvard Athletic Association will continue the intensive conditioning program of students preparatory to military service."

A native of Norristown, Pa., Bingham began life as a Lawrence (Mass.) newsboy. Later he became a bobbin boy in a textile mill and won a scholarship that put him through Phillips Exeter Academy and Harvard. He has a wife and two sons.

'Sugar' Robinson Gets T.K.O Over Jannazzo in 8th

By the Associated Press

Cleveland, Dec. 1.—Ray (Sugar) Robinson, New York's unbeaten welterweight, scored a technical knockout over Izzy Jannazzo of Brooklyn in the eighth round of a scheduled 10-round bout on the Cleveland News' seventeenth annual Christmas fund boxing show tonight.

Big Harry Bobo of Pittsburgh celebrated his return to the ring with a quick, opening-round knockout over Larry Lane of Trenton, N. J., in their scheduled 10-round bout.

Bobo nicked Lane with a left hook to the head and then sent him to the canvas with another crashing hook—this one from the right mitt.

Balzaretti Gives Victor Smart Ride

Shrimpie Is Second And Red Wrack 3d; Trainer Fined $25 For a Poor Entry

By Walter Haight
A Staff Correspondent

Charles Town, W. Va., Dec. 1.—Navy, the pet of the large racing stable owned by Mrs. E. D. Sowers of Washington, D. C., won his ninth race of the year in 28 tries here this afternoon in the best offering on the Tuesday show. Going in his best form, Navy took command early and, once in front, gave his legion of backers no anxious moments. Navy was under Jockey Willie Balzaretti and the 6-year-old gelding was well handled, winning by three lengths with something in reserve.

Jim Arthur's useful Shrimpie, winner over the Maryland milers, was the only horse to give Navy any contention and that was only in the early part of the test of a mile and a sixteenth. There were ten lengths between Shrimpie and Mrs. Mary Knieriem's Red Wrack, the third horse. W. W. Waters' Darby Du and High Name, coupled with the winner in the betting, were the only others to compete. Navy paid $3.60.

Anson Kurtz's Thrift Shop was scratched and F. McArdle, trainer of the 4-year-old son of Economic and Showa, was fined $25 by the stewards for entering a horse that was not in racing condition.

The bad riding championship of the meeting was carried off by Jockey Johnny Harrell in the fourth race. He had the mount on Hard Telling, owned by Mrs. C. M. Greer, jr., which finished second to Mrs. C. P. Miles' Petes Bet. Hard Telling was taken up going to the first turn, went to the outside fence entering the stretch, then went into the rail and was still trying to run at the end. Petes Bet proved to be the fifth winning mount for Jockey Denny Scocca at the meeting and paid $4.60.

Selections at Charles Town

Dear Al:

Despite tire shortage, gas rationing and cold weather, the attendance at this three-quarter mile oval held up exceedingly well as the winter meeting swung into stride here Monday. Despite the above-mentioned difficulties and the fact that there are no special trains, the handling was below recent years but very pleasing to the official family. All we're rooting for now is for the snow to hold off. Danny Scocca, who has been in the hospital on three different occasions this year, lost no time in reaching the winner's circle, pulling the trick four times on the opening card. Leon Garrett was an arrival but took a few days off due to a sore throat. Jockey Henri Mora, who was listed as the rider for Fairy Bay on Monday, failed to arrive in time to accept the mount and this accounted for Danny Scocca being substituted. Mora, who won the Endurance Handicap at Bowie with Chop Chop, will see duty in a few days. Corpl. O. F. (Red) Kent, who handled Royal Business when she was the "queen" of the smaller circuit, was up from his post at Front Royal, Va., and was renewing some old acquaintances. Kent formerly had the string which raced for Capt. Ewart Johnson. Earl Walden, Mort Mahoney's right-hand man, died suddenly in Baltimore yesterday. Walden was prepared to leave for Florida where he was to be employed in the mutuel department. This meeting should serve Ralph Root real well. Buddy has nine victories to his credit this year and should have little trouble in passing the 100 mark. The boys in the secretary's office this morning were all whistling "White Christmas," but this was only a stall. All were using a little reverse English as far as their thoughts were concerned. P. H. Faulconer's Roman Boy was supposed to have slipped a little during the summer sessions. If this is true, he made a pretty fair comeback here when he just breezed to his score on opening day. BILL.

First race—PICKWICK ARMS showed enough on the Maryland milers to deserve a top selection in this company. Needs only the right ride. WICKCLIFFE GAL gets the rail position and is dangerous. SMOKE BALL raced in good form at Pascoag.

Second race—SILVER BEAM likes this track and the route is right. I see no reason for mistakes. HARD LOSER has beaten this kind on occasion and is a threat. CORNELIA JANE has plenty of speed and will be right there.

Third race—BERSERK is dropping down for this event. May take the top and make every post a winning one. STEADY ON and REAL BOY to account for the place and show awards.

Fourth race—BLOWING WIND seems to have found a nice spot in this company. The 7-furlong distance suits and I'm going to string along. PAL raced well at Camden and is a threat. CUSHLAMACREE for the show end.

Fifth race—HOPTOWN LASS promises to go to the top in this distance affair and is likely to hold to the lead. I'm going to be there. TACARO LILY is formidable and deserves consideration. BATTLE LINE and PATHFINDER are possibilities.

Sixth race—OVERLIN has class, gets in light and will be hard to beat in this abbreviated sprint. LORD VATOUT and TRY FLYING are speedy and will be ready to battle it out if the top one makes mistakes.

Seventh race—AVESTA was second in good company last out at Bowie and seems the best, but is a doubtful starter. CITY JUDGE won here and is dangerous. YANKEE LAD for the show end.

Eighth race—ROSE ANITA will like the mud and gets a good post position. SAY JUDGE was second here on opening day. QUIZ KID belongs in the first flight.

Best bet—OVERLIN.

'Skins to Face Bears With Mere 5-4 Game Deficit in Rivalry

Pro Series Began on Chilly Note

First D. C. Champs Won 28-21 Game In 1937; Massacre Of '40 Stands Out

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

The Redskins and Chicago Bears have met nine times since the 'Skins moved to Washington, counting regular season games, championship playoffs and exhibition tests, and while the Bears' 73-to-0 victory in the playoff of 1940 is always used as the yardstick of the teams' meetings, actually Chicago has won just five out of nine games for a mere one-game edge.

A victory for Ray Flaherty here December 13 with the National Pro League title at stake would leave the Redskin Coach and Lieut. Comdr. George Halas all even in games in their six-year series, although in points Halas would hold a big edge.

Washington's first champion pro team started the series in 1937 when with both teams attired in sneakers to offset the icy footing of Wrigley Field the Redskins won the league title, 28-21, tieing and winning the game in the last period.

Sammy Baugh had probably the greatest day of his career that cold Sunday afternoon, completing 18 of 33 passes for 335 yards and three touchdowns. Wayne Millner was on the receiving end of most of the aerials.

Won First Two

The championship finalists then went to California for a three-game, coast-to-coast exhibition tour with the Redskins winning in San Francisco and Dallas and losing the final game in Miami when five players on each side were put out of the game for unnecessary roughness.

The first regular season meeting followed in 1938 and next to the Bears' 31-7 victory the most memorable incident was a carry-over of the roughness. Redskins' George Karamatic and Riley Smith were carried off the field, out like a light.

The Redskins beat the Bears here in 1940, 7-3, and the champion Chicagoans have been beaten only once since that time. A desperate goal line stand by the 'Skins stood out in that game as Dick Todd stopped George McAfee on the 1-foot line and Mickey Parks sat on his head to prevent him from pushing the ball into the end zone. On the very last play of the game Bob Titchenal batted down a Bear pass in the end zone.

The Bears returned in December of '40 for the playoff which ended in football's most famous score of all-time. Bill Osmanski sped around right end on the third play of the game for 68 yards and a touchdown and the rout was on. Three times the Bears scored in the first period, once in the second, four times in the third and three in the fourth. They finally had to stop trying for extra points as only one football remained in the park.

Lost by 14 Points

Last year the Redskins went to Chicago for a league game and came out on the short end, 35-21. The Bears were three touchdowns ahead at one time.

The last meeting was the exhibition game here in September which the Bears won, 38-14, one of two defeats the 'Skins suffered in 14 games this year.

The Redskin victories are scarcely remembered these days, however. They will have to win them all from now on to attempt to erase the undying sting of the massacre of '40.

Heavyweights Feature Uline Fight Program

An all-heavyweight boxing show featuring prices of 50 cents, $1 and $1.50 plus tax and involving six bouts of six scheduled rounds each, will be featured by Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn at Uline Arena next Tuesday night, December 8.

Ahearn last night announced that he is staging this heavyweight elimination in an effort to land a suitable opponent for either Buddy Walker or Jimmy Bivins, who will appear at Uline Arena in the not distant future.

In one of his top six-round features Ahearn has matched Earl Lowman, 220-pound Negro knockout conqueror of Horace Thompson here recently and a main eventer, with Adam Spencer, Negro heavyweight protege of Jimmy Johnston, who has swept all of his seven professional starts to date.

Spencer, who stands 6 feet 3 inches and weighs 210 pounds, is the first Negro heavyweight ever managed by Johnston and is picked to go far among the big fellows.

In a cofeatured six-rounder, Corpl. Buddy Knox, pointing determinedly for a return shot following his recent knockout at the hands of Buddy Walker, has been paired with King Kong, terrific punching Baltimore Negro heavyweight and one of the greatest crowd-pleasers in the business.

Four more six-round bouts are being rounded out, and reservations may be made through Franklin 5800.

Thompson Rolls 145 in Pin League

The Georgia Avenue Bowling League at Silver Spring found Thompson's 145 for Steve's Barbers and Tody Brown's 382 set for Arbaugh's Restaurant best individual counts for the night. Civil Service, with Wilson bowling 374, won two from Steve's Barbers and posted high team set of 1668, remaining in first place by virtue off a one-game margin. Wakefield Dairy rolled 589 for high team game. The only sweep was posted by Southern Maryland Seafood when the team won all three from Forest Grove.

Al Romasco, Star G. W. End, Awarded Tuffy Leemans Cup

Teammates Honor Senior at Annual Grid Banquet; Colonial Players Get Letters

Al Romasco, senior end from Monessen, Pa., received the Tuffy Leemans trophy as George Washington University's outstanding football player at the fifth annual banquet and smoker last night at the Wardman Park Hotel.

Romasco was the choice of his teammates for the award which was not decided until the final votes were counted late yesterday afternoon.

Romasco played outstanding games against William and Mary, Clemson and Georgetown and was adjudged one of the finest ends in this section the past season.

Varsity and freshman letter winners were awarded during the affair, attended by nearly 350 students, alumni and friends of the university. The event has been one of the outstanding college athletic parties of the season for five straight years, during lean seasons for the G. W. gridmen, and if they ever have a championship club they will probably have to hold it in Griffith Stadium.

Naval Officers Speak

Capt. Charles W. Fox, of the United States Navy, and Capt. Paul R. E. Pihl, who accompanied Wendell Wilkie on his round-the-world tour, were guest speakers for the occasion, the former replacing Larry McPhail, who is out of town. The naval officers did not divulge any military secrets but gave highly interesting talks.

Dr. Cloyd Heck Marvin, president of the university, and George Neville, president of the alumni association, were honored guests. Dr. Elmer Louis Kayser was in his favorite role of master of ceremonies, while Bill Sweet was chairman of the arrangements committee.

Head Grid Coach Johnny Baker awarded varsity letters and Bill Myers presented the freshman numerals. The entire coaching staff was present as well as Art Zahn and his basketball squad.

Gehringer Assigned To Navy Preflights

Detroit, Dec. 1 (INS).—Charley Gehringer, veteran second baseman of the Detroit Tigers, was in the Navy tonight, a lieutenant to be assigned to a preflight school to aid in the physical conditioning of naval air cadets.

Sugar Robinson Signs

Philadelphia, Dec. 1 (AP). — Al Nettlow, Detroit welterweight now in the Navy Air Service at Jacksonville, Fla., will meet Sugar Ray Robinson of New York in a 10-round bout at the Arena here Monday night, December 14.

Novice Class To Weigh in Here Tonight

A bumper crop of novices will report to the offices of the District of Columbia Boxing Commission tonight between 6:30 and 8 o'clock for weighing in and physical examinations preparatory to the launching of the tenth annual Golden Gloves boxing tournament at Uline Arena Friday night.

Pairings for Friday night's preliminary bouts at Turner's Arena at 8:30 o'clock will be made immediately afterward.

The deadline for novice entries closes at the Boxing Commission in the new Municipal Center at 6:30 tonight, although the final date for senior entries has been extended to a week from tonight.

Doctors William Greaney and John De Mayo will supervise the rigid physical examination tonight, and will make certain that every contestant is physically qualified for the grind before passing him.

Between 20 and 25 bouts will open the tournament at Turner's Arena Friday at 8 o'clock when wild swinging, untried youngsters square away.

Wolfe Is Leader In League Bowling

Waldrop's Restaurant, led by Harry Wolfe's 145-475, won a pair from Stanleys' in the Prince Georges Men's Bowling League last night at Hyattsville Recreation despite Harry Hilliard's 371 for the losers. Chet Lilly's top set of 385 made it possible for Ryan's to take the odd tilt from the Pickups despite a 372 effort by Perce Wolfe, and Al May's 380 led Bower's Jewelry to two from Hoffman.

Dusek, Angel In Top Spot On Arena Card

The Original Angel, whose freakish pan and physique have made him the object of curiosity for millions, will be pitted against Rudy Dusek, the chief of the noted "Riot Squad," in tonight's feature wrestling session at Turner's Arena.

Judging by the interest already evinced in The Angel's first local showing in months, the largest crowd of the indoor season is expected to see this mat monstrosity perform against the rowdy Nebraskan.

Promoter Joe Turner is also offering a star-studded supporting cast, with none other than the Yellow Mask, hooded grappler, among those listed for action. The Mask, winner of two straight at the Arena, will engage George Becker, claimant of the world's junior heavyweight championship.

In the semi-windup, Gino Garibaldi, the Italian star, will tangle with Leo Numa, West Coast Adonis. Both are popular with Arena fans. Johnny Long, still gunning for a return bout with Ernie Dusek and a shot at Jimmy Londos, will take on Bambu Talu, the Oklahoma Indian. In the curtain-raiser at 9 p. m., Jim Austeri of New York and Roy Schwartz of the Midwest will clash.

Erle D. Walden, Racing Executive, Dies in Baltimore

By the Associated Press

Baltimore, Dec. 1.—Erle D. Walden, 56, a director of the Maryland Jockey Club, died today at Union Memorial Hospital from a cerebral hemorrhage.

Walden was long connected with the executive divvisions of the pari-mutuel departments of race tracks in Maryland and New England.

His father and grandfather were directors of the Maryland Jockey Club, and the famed Walden Stakes, run at Pimlico, was named in honor of the latter.

An uncle, Robert J. Walden, also is a director of the club and maintains a large breeding establishment at Middleburg, Md.

Funeral services will be held Friday. Rev. Dr. J. Franklin Haas of the First Methodist Church will officiate.

Hockey Lions Buy Pair Of Players

Freddy Weaver, platinum blond, 18-year-old left winger who was a big favorite locally while skating with the Washington Eagles a year ago, yesterday was acquired by the Washington Lions in a deal with the Indianapolis Capitals.

In the second major deal completed by the Lions of recent weeks, General Manager Lee J. Perrin also announced that the local pros have gained the services of Cully Simon, an experienced and capable defenseman, from Indianapolis.

Both Weaver and Simon are to join the Lions for their American Hockey League match with the Cleveland Barons in Cleveland tomorrow night, and will bow in locally against the Providence Reds at Uline Arena Saturday night at 8:30.

Perrin, who recently traded veteran Center Peggy O'Neill to Hershey in exchange for Winger Bob Gracie and the loan of Spare Goalie Frank Ceryance pending the return to action of injured Net Tender Paul Gauthier, was exultant over this transaction last night.

"We will decide shortly whether ours will be a player or cash deal with Indianapolis," he said. "Meanwhile, we have a fine, young hockey player in Weaver and the defenseman we need in Simon.

"We are turning back Charley Phillips, a good defenseman, to Les Canadiens. We probably will add another defenseman shortly, however, and I'm predicting right now that our team—despite a poor start—will develop into a contender for Eastern Division championship in short order."

From Indianapolis Weaver, in long distance conversation with Perrin, expressed pleasure over the deal.

The Lions, heartened by this transaction, put plenty of enthusiasm into a full length workout at Uline's yesterday, and will skate through a final drill today prior to departing for Cleveland tonight.

Tickets for Saturday night's game with Providence are on sale at Uline Arena, and reservation may be made through FRanklin 5800.

Red Wings Upset By Bruins, 5 to 2

Boston, Dec. 1 (AP).—The Boston Bruins upset the Detroit Red Wings, 5-2, tonight before 10,000 at Boston Garden to climb into a second-place tie in the National Hockey League standing. A four-goal surge in the opening period did the damage with the Wings never able to get back into the game after that outburst.

JACK BELL

Little by little the importance of the striped bass or rockfish as a game fish is being extended. State after State along the Atlantic seaboard has passed on and announced increases in the minimum length of rockfish allowed to be kept while Maryland, Virginia and North Carolina, the productive centers of this fine fish, lag behind in its protection.

Wildlife men and ichthyologists the country over insist that for the good of commercial fisheries alone the minimum length of the species should not be less than 18 inches.

It now seems that Maryland is about to take steps to make peace in a controversy that has been reverberating.

One of the bills that will be presented before the General Assembly of Maryland when it meets in January will be one sponsored by the department of tidewater fisheries. Edwin Warfield, jr., who is chairman of the department, as well as vice chairman of the Atlantic States Marine Fisheries Commission, announced that they will seek to have the minimum length of the striped bass or rockfish increased from 11 inches to 14 inches.

Two years ago a similar attempt was made to raise the minimum length by only 1 inch, and the bill never did get out of committee. The commercial men then were able to muster enough influence to stave off this attempt.

A timely announcement has just been issued that the next meeting of the new Atlantic States Marine Fisheries Compact Commission is set for December 10 and is to be held in Baltimore.

The two previous meetings held by the commission have been largely confined to organization and it is said the body is now all set to tackle the many weighty problems before it, one of which is the striped bass.

Sportsmen are now looking forward with apprehension on the outcome of this meeting and what the compact commission's recommendations may be to the State Legislature of Maryland.

Further, they are not entirely satisfied with the unequal selection of representatives of the State's fishing interests on Maryland's newly appointed advisory council to the compact commission.

"Millions of people were made happy when news of the rescue of Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker was made public to an anxious world." So writes George Ruppert, who is sponsoring the George Ruppert Fishing Contest.

Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker is especially dear to the hearts of sportsmen in Washington, for he has been a member of the Washington Chapter of the Izaak Walton League for a number of years.

It was not surprising, therefore, when the first bits of information came in about how Eddie and his companions fared while marooned on a small rubber raft in the Pacific for three weeks. Captain Eddie's deep-sea sport angling experience proved a real life-saver to him and his companions. He proved that an angler, with a few hooks and a bit of line, will manage to catch enough to get along no matter where he may be marooned.

It may be of interest to know that all service life rafts aboard troop transports, warships, airplanes of the armed forces, and on all Pan-American Airliners carry as standard equipment emergency fishing tackle consisting of a heavy handline, wire leaders, feather lures not unlike those used on the bay for bluefish and striped bass, and a supply of strong fish hooks.

Ted Williams Would Quit Baseball to Be Ace Pilot

By the Associated Press

Amherst, Mass., Dec. 1.—After completing the first quarter of his eight-week course as a civil pilot training cadet, Ted Williams, the major leagues' temperamental and turbulent batting champion, today said he found flying so thrilling that he was willing to give up baseball for a naval aviator's career.

Williams, training at Amherst College with 29 other United States Navy V-5 enlistees, including Johnny Pesky, his Boston Red Sox teammate; John Sain and Buddy Gremp, both of the Boston Braves, and Joe Coleman, the Philadelphia Athletics' pitching rookie, has impressed his instructors and classmates alike with his determination to win the Navy wings.

"Why Ted is going after their flying stuff as hot and heavy as he did about his batting," Pesky, a mighty slugger in his own right, marveled. "You know how hard and how long he practiced hitting," he continued. "Well, he's bearing down much harder in this course than he ever did on his batting."

Williams, who frequently became excitable and, at times, resentful, during interviews, was asked how he was getting along.

"I'm not batting .400 in this flying course yet," he replied, "but I'm going to do it. Flying is the last thing I'm worrying about. It's a cinch if you just keep thinking and applying yourself. I like it so much that I'd quit baseball for it.

Williams, like most of his classmates, has totaled about six hours aloft with his instructor and he expects to take his first solo flight very soon. "I was fighting the training ship the first few times I was given the controls but now I am handling them instinctively," he explained.

Like all the other ballplayers, Williams finds mathematics the most difficult part of the exacting training program, which keeps the cadets fully occupied for 15 hours a day.

"Pesky and I and, I guess, the rest of the ballplayers here have grown very rusty about our math because, no doubt, we have been out of school much longer than the rest of the class," Williams explained. "But our instructors are very patient with us, as are all the other fellows. Therefore I crack that math book every time I get the chance. You have to know what mathematics are all about to be a Navy flier."

Evidence of Williams' determination to build himself a successful naval flying career was supplied by all his instructors. They agreed that baseball's greatest modern batter would be piloting a Navy fighting plane in action a year hence, if conditions warrant such service.

U. S. Subs Sink 5 More Jap Ships

the Japs that they had gotten away from particular actions in which the enemy thought the subs were destroyed. This would mean the Nipponese would increase the power of their depth charges and step up other antisubmarine precautions.

As a result, only in rare cases like Klakring's does the Navy release stories of its submarine force, earning it the name of the "silent service."

Yesterday, Secretary Knox lauded the achievements of the subs in harrying Japanese communication lines throughout the Western Pacific and making it difficult for the enemy to maintain its far-flung bases supplied.

"Doing Swell Job"

"They're doing a swell job," he stated.

Official Navy records credit our Pacific submarines with a total of 148 Jap ships sunk or damaged. Of these 98 are listed as sunk, 22 probably sunk and 28 damaged.

The "bag" announced yesterday included a destroyer, a 9000-ton tanker, and three cargo ships of 8000, 6300, and 2000 tons, respectively, sunk. Besides the 12,000-ton cargo vessel damaged and believed sunk another cargo ship of 6000 tons has been damaged, the communique said.

Reporting also on developments on Guadalcanal November 30, the Navy said that there was "routine patrol activity" during the day, which was supported by artillery fire and fighter plane attacks on enemy positions. Evidently the American forces still hold the initiative on the island.

Text of Communique

The communique, No. 207, follows:

"Pacific and Far East:

"1. United States submarines have reported the following results of operations against the enemy in the waters of these areas:

"(a) One destroyer sunk.

"(b) One 9000-ton tanker sunk.

"(c) One 8000-ton cargo ship sunk.

"(d) One 6300-ton cargo ship sunk.

"(e) One 2000-ton cargo ship sunk.

"(f) One 12,000-ton cargo ship damaged and believed sunk.

"(g) One 6000-ton cargo ship damaged.

"These actions have not been announced in any previous Navy Department communique.

"South Pacific (All dates are east longitude)

"2. On November 30 routine patrol activity on Guadalcanal Island was supported by artillery fire and fighter planes."

set aside laws or regulations affecting the movement of property or information "into or out of" the United States

The measure also would authorize the President to suspend laws covering the movement of persons, but only when they desire to move "out of" the United States.

War, Navy and State department officials have told the subcommittee, it was said, that existing laws hamper the movement of foreign officials and require American representatives to disclose important information to customs officers and others.

Ways and Means Committee Chairman Doughton (Democrat) of North Carolina, told reporters that while the subcommittee had unanimously reported the bill, the question of whether hearings are to be held remained "wide open."

Mateur Important 'African Rail Center

The small town of Mateur, where Anglo-American troops were reported battling Axis forces and making "satisfactory progress" toward Bizerte, is more important than its size would indicate because of the railways and higways that center there, says a National Geographic Society bulletin. It is some 30 miles south of Bizerte.

To the north, rails lead from Mateur to Ferryville, dynamo of the Bizerte naval base; southwest they run to the inland town of Nebeur, crossing on their way the vital Tebessa-to-Tunis line. From west to east, other rails pass through Mateur from the border port of Tabarka to the Tunisian capital, Tunis, and beyond. Big and little roads radiate from Mateur in all directions, with highways connecting it with Bizerte, Tunis, and other important coastal and inland points.

Mateur is situated on a hill rising from a broad plain, surrounded by mountains. In peacetime it was the center of the grape, grain, and cattle-raising activities of this fertile plain, a region which supported a large population even in ancient times.

Air Battle Raging for Tunisia As Allies 'Turn on the Heat'

AS ALLIES GO MARCHING ON—American and French troops were reported last night to have reached the Tunisian coast (lower arrow) between Sfax and Gabes, severing Axis overland route from Tripoli. In the north, British and Americans were fast pocketing Axis forces at both Tunis and Bizerte quent clashes with Axis armored partols, and in southeastern Tunisia French patrols were reported to have destroyed many Axis installations.

The Allied force pounded the four key coastal points night and day, the R. A. F. taking the night trick and the Americans carrying on by day.

Maj. Gen. James H. Doolittle sent Flying Fortresses, light and medium bombers and twin-motored P-38 fighters into a continuous action.

The Bizerte docks were smashed in a high-altitude pin-point attack by the Flying Fortresses yesterday while hangars and railroad yards were set afire from a visit of medium bombers.

The light bombers returned to Tunis this morning with a shattering attack on the airfield. R. A. F. medium bombers had unloaded on Bizerte last night.

Hangars, airdromes and railroad yards were swept with explosions at Gabes in an American raid today, and Sfax also was heavily hit.

P-38s on patrols of their own, besides those with the bomber groups, dived out of the clouds to shoot up Axis transports over Tunis and Bizerte.

In one air battle the P-38s encountered 10 late-model Messerschmitts over Mateur and shot down one and damaged three, Wes Gallagher, Associated Press correspondent, reported from Allied headquarters in North Africa.

In another encounter with six of the newest Messerschmitts, the Americans shot down another and damaged three.

At least three more German planes were shot up at the Gabes Airdrome.

Altogether five Allied planes were lost, including one P-38, a communique said, while six enemy planes were destroyed.

One of the American bombers over Gabes was shot down, but two P-38s, in a spectacular rescue, alighted and took on the crew of the wrecked craft.

A War Department communique, issued in Washington, follows:

"North Africa.

"1. Air activity continues in the whole Tunisian area including bombing and especially fighter plane sorties against enemy low-flying attacks on ground troops.

"2. Our fighters have destroyed six enemy aircraft in the past few days in addition to those already announced. We have lost five fighters but three of our pilots are safe.

"3. Allied bombers have attacked the docks at Bizerte in daylight, and have made another raid on Bizerte airdrome where a hangar was set on fire and other fires were left burning. Gabes and Sfax have also been attacked in daylight by our bombers.

"4. Our forward units are maintaining strong pressure on the enemy's position in the vicinity of Mateur and Djedeida. Contact also has been made at several points in the mountains between these two places.

"5. In southeastern Tunisia numerous patrols, including French, have damaged enemy installations."

Ickes to Take Top Labor Job If Chief Insists

combined labor-manpower job if the Chief Executive insisted.

President Roosevelt evaded questions about the proposed cabinet shuffle at his regular press conference.

Nothing is ready to serve, he told reporters at the outset, although he acknowledged that quite a few things were on the range. Observers believed that the list of "what's cooking" included "czars" for food and oil, in addition to the Cabinet shift.

Asked if Ickes appointment to the labor post was "on the range," the President stated that he thought he could say it was not on the range.

Under the projected shift, Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt would replace Ickes as Secretary of Interior and Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins would become head of the Federal Security Administration, a post which McNutt now holds, in addition to his manpower job.

Observers doubted that Ickes' counter-proposal would be accepted by the administration, since the plan hinges in part on the President's apparent desire to centralize all labor activities in the Labor Department. Allowing Ickes to retain the Interior post instead of becoming the Labor Department chief would destroy the developing pattern.

Another factor is that organized labor is supporting the proposal to put Ickes in the Labor Department, partly because the move will restore the department to the important role it enjoyed in former years.

Meanwhile, Representative Jerry Voorhis (Democrat) of California yesterday strongly advocated a high command on the home front to defeat confusion, regardless of possible Cabinet changes to deal with the manpower problem.

Appearing before a Senate Labor Subcommittee, Voorhis indorsed legislation for an Office of War Mobilization.

Apparently referring to reports concerning the Cabinet shift, Voorhis said "new proposals regarding manpower" in the press "might well be the means of improving the situation."

"But in my opinion they would not take the place of this legislation," he said. "For even if all decisions regarding manpower as such were concentrated in one place, there would still remain the absolute necessity of coordinating manpower decisions with those affecting production and procurement."

Russians Bag 50 Nazi Planes Flying Aid to Trapped Foe

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

THIRD DRIVE IN THE MAKING—The Russian offensive west of Moscow (1) appears to be working around the rear of the Germans at Gzatsk, while the long thrust near Velikie Luki continued to be a threat to the German railroad communications across Latvia serving the German front near Leningrad. Another Red army thrust (dotted arrow) appears to be a possible threat to German-held Smolensk. A new offensive (2), in the making around Voronezh, was reported by the Berlin radio. This might be aimed at Kharkov. Prongs of the Soviet pincers (3) at Stalingrad were less than 50 miles apart in the effort to trap German forces besieging that city emy.

(Stockholm accounts from Berlin quoted a military spokesman as saying the "greatest tank battle of the war" was being fought on the central front and the Nazi position was "very grave," with a compact wall of Russian tanks pressing against Nazi lines. Stockholm and London both said street fighting was in progress in Rzhev, 130 miles northwest of Moscow, and that the key defense city was surrounded.

(The German communique spoke of bombing Russian troops, camps and rail facilities on the central Don day and night, suggesting yet a third offensive in the Voronezh sector midway between Moscow and Stalingrad. The Germans said Russian attacks between the Volga and Don, in the Don elbow, and on the Taupse and Terex sectors in the Caucasus were frustrated. "Southwest of Kalinin and near Toropets embittered fighting is continuing," the communique said of the central front.)

Hitler was said to have appealed directly for recapture of the vital Rzhev-Vyazma Railway which the Russians have cut and to have ordered the Germans themselves to machine-gun any retreating Nazi units. Red Star said a captured document quoted Hitler as saying the loss of Rzhev would "equal the loss of half of Berlin."

Nazis Hold Petain Inaccessible, Say Swedish Reports

The Office of War Information said last night that the Stockholm newspaper Dagens Nyheder had received this report from its Vichy correspondent:

"Since the German occupation of the unoccupied zone the Hotel du Parc (residence of Marshal Petain) has been inaccessible for the French people and is guarded by a chain of sentries. Petain, who previously was seen daily, for the last 10 days has been quite as unseen as (Pierre) Laval."

The correspondent said the automobiles of diplomats had vanished from before the hotel and had been replaced by those of the German army, while "hotel after hotel is occupied by Germans."

C. & P. Reports Sharp Gain in October Net

By S. Oliver Goodman

Net income of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. soared to $289,418 in October, more than doubling the $123,814 in the same month last year. The increase was recorded despite an adjustment to reflect the October portion of Federal income taxes and depreciation at higher rates.

Capacity-taxing business was mirrored in the month's operating revenues of $2,028,184, which compared with $1,409,037 in October, 1941. Operating expenses leaped to $1,417,366, against $1,074,515 in the same 1941 month. Operating taxes totaled $291,429, as compared with $122,008 last year.

There were 354,662 telephones in service here at the end of October, which was an increase of 1960 over the previous month. Users made 43,505,000 calls during the month, or 2,485,000 more than in October, 1941. Both totals (telephones in service and calls) were new all-time records for C. & P.

For the 10 months the company reported a drop in net income despite a 35 per cent increase in operating revenues. Expenses, including taxes, were 41 per cent heavier.

Net income totaled $1,211,582 for the 10-month period, against $1,271,927 in the similar 1941 period. Operating revenues of $17,456,383 compared with $12,927,656 in 1941. Operating expenses were $13,636,260, against $9,510,195, while taxes were $1,599,297, against $1,278,916.

Charles A. Robinson, vice president and general manager, pointed out that investment in plant was $14,160,049 more than in October, 1941.

Business Briefs Of D. C. Interest

Saul Co.'s 50th Milestone

The B. F. Saul Co., one of Washington's oldest real estate firms, yesterday marked the fiftieth anniversary of its founding.

It was on December 1, 1892, when B. F. Saul established a modest real estate office on Eleventh Street between E and F Streets Northwest. After a number of moves to larger quarters (one caused by a cyclone in 1913) the company erected its own building in 1926 on Fifteenth Street.

The company pioneered in large scale subdivisions, such as Saul's Addition, North Cleveland Park and many other developments.

R. B. F. Saul, the founder, died in 1931. Present officers are: John Saul, chairman of the executive committee; J. Wriley Jacobs, president; Andrew Saul, executive vice president; Joseph B. Bowling, vice president; Frank Bell, vice president; William P. Benson, vice president and comptroller; Raymond M. Hooker, assistant vice president; Earl D. Thompson, treasurer, and Harvey L. Humphrey, secretary.

November Clearings Drop

Washington bank clearings in November totaled $147,272,344, as compared with $148,004,088 in the same month last year.

In the 11 months of 1942, however, clearings reached $1,699,000,000, breaking all previous records. In the same period last year clearings were $1,583,558,000.

The November decline in check turnover was the first in many years here.

One informed source said that the drop may have been due to the fact that some local banks recently had started a new schedule of service charges on checking accounts, based on number of checks drawn and amount of deposited funds. This had the effect of making Washingtonians use their checking accounts less and pay cash more often.

Store Pays Yule Bonuses

Christmas bonuses were paid yesterday to 275 employes of the Raleigh Haberdasher on F Street. Employes of the store for more than 10 years received $25 while those with 5 to 10 years service were given $20. Every employe received a bonus, varying according to length of service.

Wage Dispute Stalls Plant Building Ships

By the Associated Press

South Portland, Me., Dec. 1.—Liberty ship construction virtually ceased tonight at the South Portland Shipbuilding Corp. plant as night shift employes joined day workers in a walkout stemming from a wage dispute.

Edward Miller, president of the A. F. of L. machinists' local, asserted that the walkout was "unauthorized" and that the men "went out on their own."

The A. F. of L. is the workers' bargaining agent at the plant, whose production record has been termed by congressional investigators as the "worst" of any building liberty freighters.

The walkout was orderly, yard police chief Harold A. Miller said. At the change of shifts at 3 p. m. (E. W. T.) he estimated that more than 2500 workers gathered at the sprawling yard's two main gates, but they dispersed quickly.

Gen. Sherman Miles, chief of the first service command, Boston, visited the plant briefly this afternoon after a trip to Augusta on another matter.

Both management and union officials agreed that the trouble center was classification of employes and delay in applying interim wage rates approved by the War Labor Board.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Elinor Herrick, personnel director for the Todd Shipyards Corp. with which the South Portland yard is affiliated, whom Miller said had been "giving us the run-around," was scheduled to meet A. F. L. representatives tomorrow.

Thatcher B. Pinkham, general manager of the company, said "We have no dispute over this wage scale; in fact many workers have already received increases based on the new scale. We do, however, disagree firmly with the union as to what employes should gain."

Chrysler Strikers Ordered to Return

Detroit, Dec. 1 (AP).—Approximately 400 welders at the Chrysler Corporation's Kercheval Avenue plant who left their jobs today in a dispute over the dismissal of a fellow worker, were ordered to return to their jobs immediately by Leo LaMotte, regional director of the United Automobile Workers (C. I. O.).

The work stoppage grew out of the discharge of George Abdullah, a welder, who company officials asserted habitually left his job from 5 to 30 minutes early every day.

"I won't do a thing for these boys until they stop this fussing around and go back to work," Lamotte said.

Jack Zeller, president of Local No. 7, A. A. W.-C. I. O., the local of which the men are members, said it had been a practice of years for welders to quit work five minutes early in order to wash up.

The plant has been engaged in naval ordnance work.

Court Reverses Lindsay Ruling

months after the crime.

Instead, however, Lindsey will be going on trial again in the District Court. The charge of rape is expected to be consolidated with that of assault on the soldier, as in the first hearing.

Justice Harold M. Stephens said in the majority opinion that Lindsey's attorneys—James T. G. Tyson and Richard R. Atkinson—had a right to test the Government mental experts by sharp cross examination. The trial court was wrong, the opinion said, in upholding a Government objection to this questioning.

Justice Wiley Rutledge agreed with this finding, but said in a concurring opinion that he thought the jury was instructed properly. Justice Stephens thought not.

Justice Henry W. Edgerton dissented from the views of his colleagues. Said he, "there was no substantial evidence favorable to" Lindsey.

Justice Stephens recommended that the Supreme Court be asked to say whether the District law on rape is constitutional. The questioned point is the provision that the jury may recommend the death penalty.

12 Rescued in Hotel Fire at Richmond

Richmond, Va., Dec. 1 (AP).—Twelve persons were rescued by firemen with ladders from the second and third floors of Miller's Hotel here today when flames started by an oil burner roared through the basement and caused a two-alarm fire.

Fire department officials reported after a preliminary check that no one was injured.

FWA Trys To Find Use For Building

The Federal Works Agency yesterday blamed the imperative need of concentrating on provision of additional office space for having allowed a three-story apartment house containing 38 living units to remain vacant since August of last year.

Blamed, too, was the fact that blueprints for the building, known as The Capitol Hill and located at Delaware Avenue and C Street Southwest, were not available when the structure was acquired by the Government in 1930.

"It was purchased," an FWA spokesman said yesterday, "more or less in the dark because the owner could not find the blueprints. Hence, not until August, 1941, when engineers began to tear out partitions did it develop that the building was structurally unsound for use as an office building."

A survey is now under way, it was stated, to determine whether the building can be converted at reasonable cost to office space for the use of the WAVES.

Failing this, the FWA said, it is likely that the structure will be operated by the Government to house civilian warworkers.

The building was purchased under a land acquisition program for development of the Federal Triangle, but when it developed that there was no immediate need for the apartment house, it was leased back to its former owner until August, 1941, when the great need for Government office space was becoming apparent.

The tenants were ousted and engineers went to work, only to discover the building would not support heavy files and other office equipment. Thereafter, FWA said, it was so busy with temporary Government buildings that it was unable to devote any of its time to The Capitol Hill.

Although the building has been inspected daily, no watchman has been on the premises for some time and as a result many windows have been broken out and a general state of deterioration has set in.

The survey now under way to find a use for the structure was started several weeks ago, FWA reported.

WPB Gas Edict Delayed Day

The War Production Board yesterday notified 50 tenants of the River Terrace development that they will have gas heat until noon today, to give them time to petition the United States Court of Appeals for a temporary stay of a WPB order demanding conversion of the homes to coal heating.

John T. Moutoux, of the WPB information division, said officials had not indicated what course would be followed if the appellate court turned down the plea for a temporary restraining order. It appeared, however, the tenants would be forced to submit to conversion in that event.

The tenants, who have been fighting the order since last March, appealed to President Roosevelt for aid Monday night, after District Court refused to suspend the WPB order pending the outcome of court hearings on the case.

Under the order, issued February 16, new homes in certain areas were required to install coal heaters, unless foundations for the houses had been completed before March 1. In their injunction suit against WPB, the tenants contended that cement footings already had been poured, but Justice F. Disckinson Letts held that these did not constitute foundations.

Schools to Release Defense Messengers When Alarm Sounds

Superintendent of Schools Frank W. Ballou and other school officials agreed yesterday to allow children registered in the civilian defense messenger service to be released from school upon the sounding of an air raid alarm, it was announced yesterday.

Acting at the suggestion of Chief Air Raid Warden William J. Mileham, Dr. Ballou issued circulars to the heads of the various schools asking their cooperation with the local wardens.

Dr. Ballou asserted it would be more reasonable to have the messengers used in areas surrounding their individual schools. In cases where the number of messengers in the school outweighed the demand of the moment, Dr. Ballou recommended that they work on shifts, thus providing each messenger with an opportunity to see active duty.

Mileham explained that only those messengers who have received the proper family sanction and have received official identification cards and recognition by the OCD would be allowed to participate in the work.

21,640 Stirrup Pumps Ordered for Washington

District Purchasing Agent Roland Brennan was instructed yesterday by the Commissioners to order the entire lot of 21,640 stirrup pumps allotted to the District, thus ending weeks of indecision over how the pumps were to be bought and distributed.

The District will pay outright for 5000 of the pumps and the rest, underwritten by the Central Labor Union, are to be sold to the public through the Peoples Drug Store chain. They will cost between $1.90 and $2. The pumps are expected to arrive in Washington within two weeks.

D. C. Hotels, Cafes To Keep Food Record

All restaurants, hotels and institutions in the District have been directed by the OPA to keep detailed records of the amount of food used and the number of persons served during the month of December, Whitney Leary, OPA director for the District, announced yesterday.

Forms for the records will be distributed later and will be returned to the OPA offices here.

The number of persons served, the gross dollar revenue from food and nonalcoholic beverages and amounts of sugar, coffee, butter, meats, canned fish, cheese, margerine, lard, oils, canned fruit and vegetables, milk and other dairy products used must be included in the reports.

Ten thousand Washington Victory Volunteer Corps block workers will launch their door-bell-ringing campaign today to inform householders of the many ways they can contribute materially to the war effort.

Each block will be canvassed by a lieutenant working with other lieutenants under an area captain.

But such a view of the event was contradicted both by the girl's testimony and by the appellant's. . . . His denial that the event had occurred was wholly inconsistent with any theory of consent."

The court also rejected Ewing's plea that he had been inadequately represented by counsel during the trial, pointing out that as many as five attorneys, including Ewing's son, had participated in the case.

Ersatz Rubber Hope Brighter, Jones Asserts

By the Associated Press

A statement that the production rate of synthetic rubber would reach "something like" one million tons annually by the end of 1943 was attributed to Secretary of Commerce Jesse Jones yesterday as Nation-wide rationing of gasoline went into effect to save tires.

Jones' estimate — considerably higher than goals previously discussed—was disclosed by Chairman Steagall (Democrat) of Alabama after an executive session of the House Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Middle of Next Year

Steagall said the Government now had a rubber stockpile of between 600,000 and 700,000 tons, and added: "This is my personal opinion—I think that we ought to be pretty well out of the woods as far as rubber is concerned by the middle of next year."

Just how far the expanded production of synthetic rubber, if realized, would go toward meeting the rubber shortage obviously would be dependent upon the needs of the military. There have been estimates that the Nation's needs in normal times amount to nearly 700,000 tons.

Meanwhile, the Banking Committee swiftly and unanimously approved a measure increasing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation's loaning authority by an additional five billion dollars.

Jones, behind closed doors, outlined the RFC's need, but declined after the session to specify the uses to which the additional loans would be put beyond saying that they would be "entirely for war purposes."

However, in view of his reference to the rubber situation made public by Steagall, it appeared that some of the money would be used to develop the synthetic rubber program.

Jones Will Appear

Jones will appear before the Senate Banking Committee today.

While the House Banking Committee was meeting, a House interstate commerce subcommittee was concluding a 10-day study of the rubber and oil situation with a practical demonstration on how the average automobile tire may be used without an inner tube.

John B. McGay and Victor F. Barnett of Tulsa, Okla., who put on the demonstration, estimated that the 135 million inner tubes now in use on passenger cars and the 50 million tubes in stock could be turned into the Government rubber pile and would furnish a quarter-million tons of "excellent reclaimable rubber."

The interstate subcommittee began its inquiry during protests from a strong Congressional bloc—chiefly composed of lawmakers from Western oil-producing States—that the Nation-wide gasoline rationing order was unnecessary at this time.

Without success, the bloc sought a delay of at least 30 days to permit a more detailed study of the problem.

OPA to Investigate U. S. Cafeteria Prices

Office of Price Administration is going after Government cafeterias. An investigation already is under way into prices charged Federal workers. It resulted from the recent price rise in the cafeterias operated by Welfare and Recreational Association, a semi-private organization. Protests from employes themselves to OPA are said to have caused Leon Henderson to order the inquiry. OPA officials believe they have authority over cafeteria and restaurant prices despite the fact they haven't used it. An OPA order outlawing the recent food price hikes is a clear possibility.

A preliminary inquiry tends to show, it is reported, that independent cafeterias in Federal buildings—such as are operated at the Government Printing Office, Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and the Agriculture Department—serve larger portions at less money than the Welfare and Recreation cafeterias. It was also pointed out that the welfare cafeterias are subsidized indirectly by the Government in that much of the equipment is purchased by the Government. Moreover, that the average "rent" paid by welfare cafeterias is $4 a day. With the giant cafeteria in the Pentagon Building being operated at cost, the Government employes in other buildings are demanding that the the profit on the food they eat be wiped out.

Navy canceled its move to Pentagon because every single bureau objected and some of them took their protests to high places . . . The 'teen-age draft has cost Federal Bureau of Investigation scores of competent young men who were recruited a year ago on the belief they'd be draft-free for several years. The boys are being replaced with girls as they leave. FBI, like most other Federal agencies, won't hire boys in 1-A . . . OPA employes have been asked to be one-man recruiting staffs by the agency. "OPA has a great need for clerical and professional personnel. The personnel office will appreciate any suggestions of qualified candidates. Perhaps you have a friend or acquaintance back home who may be interested in a position."

Senator James Mead of New York, is reported to have been selected by Senate Democrats to become chairman of the Senate Civil Service Committee. He's outranked by four other Democrats but they have all rejected it . . . Howard O. Hunter is reported to have quietly resigned his position as special assistant to OPA Boss Leon Henderson. He was formerly Chief of Works Projects Administration and he was credited with doing a pretty good job despite the fact that he was under constant fire from Capitol Hill . . . War Production's labor management committees will be moved to the Labor Department if Harold Ickes becomes Secretary. WPB has given the committees a scandalous kicking around but they'd get a new lease on life under Ickes.

WPB Production Chief Charles E. Wilson wants control over some of Material Chief Ferdinand Eberstadt's industry committees. The controversy is on friendly terms so far . . . Thanks to Treasury Secretary Morgenthau for ordering war bonds delivered to Federal employes within 15 days after a bond had been paid for through payroll deductions. If delivery of your bonds continues to be delayed please inform this column by letter and we'll see that Treasury is notified . . . Several Government dormitories for women will be ready for occupancy by January 6. National Housing isn't ready yet to receive applications but the employe counselor in your agency can give you the latest information.

The new compromise pay-raise bill for Federal employes will carry a provision which would require the adjustment of salaries on a minor scale up to around $3500. The sponsors—Representative Ramspeck and Senator Mead—have agreed tentatively to pay a flat 20 per cent increase to employes making $2900 and under. This would mean that an employe paid $2900 would get $3480 under the bill. However, an adjustment would have to be made in the salaries of employes now paid from $2901 to $3480. Unless that was done, as one employe said, a supervisor would be paid less than an underling and many employes would demand that their base salaries be cut so they could get the 20 per cent raise. The compromise pay bill is said to be assured of wide support.

This is to notify suggestion committees in the many Federal agencies that they will have through next Tuesday—December 8—to make nominations in the November Better Government Contest. The employe who makes the best suggestion for the improvement of the Federal service will be given a $100 war bond. Another $100 war bond will be awarded for December and each month thereafter.

Problems Of Colleges Canvassed

Educators Criticize Armed Services and WMC as Contributors To Uncertainties

The problems of colleges and universities in a war world were canvassed yesterday at George Washington University, where local educators criticized the War Manpower Commission and the armed services as prime contributors to the uncertainty and confusion now rampant in the field of higher education.

Assembled at G. W. for the sixth annual Parent-Teacher Institute, the educators heard Dr. Paul Douglass, president of American University, score the WMC for "a series of failures—always coming too late and, in my opinion, 90 per cent of the time doing the wrong thing."

Specific Accusation

Specifically, the manpower agency was accused of failure to indicate the numbers of men needed by war industries in the various brackets of professional training and special skills.

J. H. Reid, dean of men at the University of Maryland, told the group: "We're willing to give whatever courses the Army, Navy or Marine Corps want given, but we don't know what they want."

A picture of colleges operating with depleted funds, smaller faculties and with nothing remaining of the past but an accelerated educational program, was painted by Dr. Douglass, who said that at American University one building had been taken over by the Government, 10 buildings and five acres by the Navy, and one building by the Army.

"We've been forced," he said, "to make a choice of making a college vocational school with an accelerated program or continuing a liberal arts program that will teach men to be good soldiers, who will serve when they are properly prepared." He expressed doubt that an effective peace can be planned by stampeding men into the Army.

Major Uncertainties

Three major uncertainties in higher education were enumerated by Dr. Francis Brown, formerly of New York University and now a member of the American Council on Education:

Lack of knowledge as to the future status of the Army and Navy enlisted reserve corps; the "teen age" draft's effect on college enrollment, and the WMC's failure to issue directives for the training of men for industrial and professional work.

He urged expansion of college programs to include more adults and the physically handicapped, and declared:

"We shall need to find ways by which colleges and universities can devote full and unstinted effort to the war but at the same time keep long range views in the field of values for the postwar world."

Problem of Survival

Dr. Walter E. Hagar, president of Wilson Teachers College, saw the problem of colleges and universities as one of survival, and charged that their resources were not being used to best advantage.

When the schools approached the Government with a wartime progrom of their own divising, they were met, he said, by the charge that they were merely trying to save their own necks.

Lack of instructions and competition between the armed services for manpower was seen by the Rev. Edmund A. Walsh, S. J., vice president of Georgetown University, as the source of much uncertainty.

He declared a liberal arts education was designed to give vision and humanity and detected a tendency to use schools in the present crisis for noneducational ends.

First Optimistic Note

The first optimistic note of yesterday's session came from the Very Rev. Msgr. George Johnson, associate professor of education at Catholic University, who observed that colleges have been caught in the midst of confusion created by the Nation's failure to think in terms of war, and declared:

"But it will come out all right. In the postwar world we'll all be able to go back to work in a big way. It will be a field day for educators."

Dr. Cloyd Heck Marvin, president of George Washington University, discussed the conflict between vocational and liberal arts education. The former, he said, "has to be predicated on disciplined culture."

Presiding over the institute was Dr. James Harold Fox, dean of the school of education at G. W.

Bill Lifts Garnishee Limit in D. C. to $150

Chairman Randloph of the House District Committee yesterday introduced a bill exempting all monthly earnings of family heads under $150 from attachment in the District. Under present local law all earnings in excess of $100 may be garnisheed.

The limitation applies only to Washington residents "who provide for the support of a family . . . for two months next preceding the issuing of any writ or process from any court or officer."

Jury Orders 2 Motorists To Stand Trial

D. C. traffic deaths this year . 100
Deaths this date last year .. 85
District total last year 95

Two motorists, both figuring in two of last month's 11 traffic fatalities, were ordered held for trial at Municipal Court under the Negligent Homicide Act by a coroner's jury yesterday.

Verdicts of the jury in the two pedestrian cases came as traffic officials were probing this year's death toll for causes so that appropriate precautionary measures may be taken.

At the two hearings yesterday, the jury decided both a bus driver and a taxi driver were negligent when they struck a U. S. Navy sergeant and a 48-year-old woman in the past two weeks.

Harold M. Curtis, 25, of 1375½ Pennsylvania Avenue Southeast, the bus driver, was held in the death of Sergt. George Perriera, 34, U. S. Navy Yard, who died at Casualty Hospital November 20.

Driver's Story

Perriera was struck at Eleventh Street and Virginia Avenue Southeast, November 20, as he was crossing the avenue in the crosswalk. The bus driver, it was testified, said he saw the soldier as he was making a turn but that the man ran into his vehicle.

At the second inquest, Foster L. Jones, 24, of 418 Kentucky Avenue Southeast, a cab driver, was deemed responsible for the death of Mrs. Lila Fletcher, 48, 333 C Street Southeast, struck and killed at Third Street and Pennsylvania Avenue Southeast, Sunday afternoon.

It was testified that Mrs. Fletcher was knocked 54 feet by the impact with the cab and that skid marks in the street measured 72 feet.

Intersection Rule

According to Lieut. William J. Liverman of the Accident Investigation Unit, Jones said he had no knowledge of a motor vehicle regulation requiring automobiles to reduce their speed at intersections.

Inspector Arthur E. Miller, District traffic supervisor, in his new capacity of "traffic accident analyzer" sought to learn the causes of last month's deaths by studying facts pertaining to them.

"Five of the fatalities," he said "were caused by street cars and buses. Three of these deaths were due to the fault of the victims and two were due to negligence on the part of a bus operator and a streetcar motorman," he said.

"Until we are able to determine the exact causes of the majority of traffic deaths it is impossible to prescribe adequate remedies."

80 Miles an Hour Brings $150 Fine

Invoking the District's new speed law aimed at conserving tires and gasoline, Judge Nathan R. Margold, in Municipal Court yesterday, imposed a fine of $150 on a youthful first offender who was said to have driven as fast as 80 miles an hour along Sixteenth Street Northwest.

The defendant, Charles Edmond Biggs, 18, of Silver Spring, Md., was placed on probation for one year.

"In our national emergency," Judge Margold told Biggs, "it is essential that we observe speed laws in order to save gasoline and rubber. Those who violate these laws may expect no leniency in my court."

Under the new amendment, approved November 25 by President Roosevelt, Biggs was liable to a maximum penalty of 90 days in jail or a fine of $300. Previously the maximum was a fine of $25 for the first offense.

Later Numbers Excel First Of Philadelphia Orchestra

Eugene Ormandy conducts the Philadelphia Orchestra on Tuesday night in Constitution Hall. Soloist: Artur Rubinstein. Program: Symphony in G major (Haydn), Symphonie Concertante for piano and orchestra (Saymanovski), Second Essay for Orchestra (Barber), Piano Concerto in A minor (Grieg).

Not much was missed by those patrons of the Philadelphia Orchestra who were delayed by the blackout on their way to Constitution Hall last evening and were obliged to wait in the foyer until the first number had been concluded. One might have expected that the gala occasion, coinciding almost to the day with the orchestra's first concert in Washington 40 years ago, would have been celebrated with an unusual composition. But Eugene Ormandy trotted out one of Haydn's most familiar symphonies, the one in G major variously designated as No. 8, No. 13, No. 88 and "Letter V," according to the list consulted. In view of the many unperformed symphonies by the genial genius of Esterhazy, this choice was not the happiest.

BROWN

There were novelties, however, on the program and they came along after all the late-comers had been seated. Both Karol Szymanovski's "Symphonie Concertante" for piano and orchestra and Samuel Barber's "Second Essay for Orchestra" received their first local performances, and the former had as soloist Artur Rubinstein to whom it is dedicated. Mr. Ormandy's disclosure of the score was intelligent and sympathetic, and if some listeners failed to comprehend them completely at the first hearing, the fault did not lie in the clarity of exposition.

Szymanovski's early works led one to believe that the mantle of Chopin had fallen upon his shoulders, for they had lyric intensity and Polish atmosphere together with poetic delicacy. But he was a child of his century and yielded to the growing tendency toward dissonance, with the result that his music became clouded and mottled. Yet in the "Symphonie Concertante" thematic beauty is evident under the harshness, and the work has power in its impetuous drive. It is definitely motivated by folk feeling in the phrasing of the melodies, but the harmonic vesture is so highly sophisticated as to be out of keeping with naivete, and the music is unnecessarily acid.

Samuel Barber's "Second Essay" is not as epigrammatic as his first, neither does it fall quite so gratefully on the ear. The style is more involved and the thought is not so easy to follow. One of our most ingenious and original composers, Mr. Barber always interests one with what he has to say, and in this case he has a rather serious thesis for discussion in so short a form. While the work does not approach the profundity of his "Adagio for Strings," it is of the same intellectual order, and has a stimulating quality in its statements and development of the ideas.

Artur Rubinstein, who has coped very successfully with the technical difficulties of the solo part in Szymanovski's bitter-sweet composition, became quite lyrical in the Grieg concerto with which the program closed. His touch was persuasive in the singing adagio, and the brilliance of his playing was subdued to the medium without losing effectiveness.

Inducements to get passengers and drivers to co-operate in 24-hour group use of taxicabs are the first things to be determined in bringing order out of the District wartime taxi chaos, Government and industry officials agreed in an all-day session yesterday with the Public Utilities Commission.

On the other hand, there must be some bargain elements to persuade the individual rider to share his cab with a stranger; on the other, it was agreed, there should be something extra in it for the driver if he is to undertake the additional mileage and time involved in loading his cab to full capacity.

Three to Draft Plan

To work out a rate scale that would be most nearly acceptable to all parties, John H. Royer, jr., president of the Combined Cab Cos.; Harry I. Davis, Diamond Cab president, and Edwin A. Glenn, cab union head, were appointed a committee to present a plan for consideration at public hearings to be called by the PUC.

This committee has before it four separate proposals for rates to be charged. First, there is the scale proposed by the cab industry last summer which would call for cost per person of 20, 25, 35 and 45 for each of the four major cab zones. Royer yesterday suggested a scale of 25, 35, 45 and 55 cents, and Davis asked for a lesser scale of 25, 30, 35 and 40 cents—providing the OPA doesn't curtail the present allotment of gasoline to taxicabs.

Glenn, pessimistic over the chances of drivers cooperatin 100 per cent in group riding if less than standard rates are charged, reiterated that each passenger in a shared vehicle be charged the full fare for his ride.

At one point he used the analogy of three persons going together into a restaurant and expecting to get three cups of coffee for the price of one.

"You still don't have to drink out of the same cup," said Clewell Sykes, OPA taxi division representative at the conference.

Sykes was outspoken in his criticism of the District taxi business, calling the telephone service "damned rotten" in comparison with other cities in the country.

V. A. McElfresh, PUC chief accountant, was named chairman of a committee to work out some method of improving this service, which even the granting by the PUC of extra charges for house calls has not succeeded in stimulating.

The time and mileage wasted in answering these calls, and the reported reluctance of passengers to pay for waiting time were given by industry spokesman as reasons for the refusal of drivers to devote themselves to call-box service.

PUC member Gregory Hankin proposed pooling of all call boxes and mandatory attention to them, but the concession held by the various cab companies and the difficulties of enforcing such an order overrode Hankin's suggestion.

Haphazard Now

Glenn was asked to form a committee to study the problem of settling definite work hours for cab drivers. Under the present loosely organized and supervised system of cab operation, there is no way of setting definite hours for cab drivers to work. As a result there is a deliberate shortage at the very time the most cabs are needed, during rush hours, quick showers and other emergency periods. It was pointed out at the conference that without working for wages, and without any sort of franchise granted cab drivers there is little way of putting them on definite hours either by persuasion or coercion.

Hack Inspector Joseph Harrington said that there had been almost no reports of cab cruising, as the present heavy demand for cabs at all times practically eliminated the chances of cruising. Glenn stated that there was some cruising in the early morning hours.

Harrington proposed that receipts be used by drivers instead of the present form of manifests which, he pointed out, can be tampered with at the will of the driver. The receipts also could be used for tracing down lost articles, which seem to be piling up more and more as harried Government officials and warworkers travel about the Capital.

Army Plane Crashes in Va.

An Army plane with four men aboard crashed near Waterford, Va., 10 miles from Leesburg late yesterday, a spokesman at Bolling Field here said last night.

According to unconfirmed reports, two officers parachuted to safety. The fate of the other two is undetermined, the spokesman said. The plane was making a routine flight from Fort Bragg, N. C., to Greensboro, N. C.

Duty Hint

First Lady Says Family Main War Job

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt yesterday urged American women to consider their families as the war job which needs their first attention and warned them against comparing their work with the work women are doing in Great Britain.

"When I said I found every woman in England doing a specific war job, even if for part time," she said yesterday at a luncheon given in her honor by the Women's National Press Club, "I did not mean to infer that women over here should be guided accordingly.

Some Apparently Unhappy

"I have had several letters from women who seem to have been made unhappy by the thought they are not as closely connected with the war as the British women are. Conditions here are not the same as they are in England and it is incorrect to assume they are.

"American women today have a particular duty to their families, even if their children are grown."

The First Lady said the uniform is the standard dress for women in England, is worn to parties and dinners regularly.

"Women not in uniform dress very simply, and everybody has the same number of coupons for clothes. You can pay more for a dress than someone else does, but you cannot buy more dresses than she does. The coupons go for uniforms, too; so when you buy your uniform there are fewer coupons left," she said.

Even new clothes sent from this country by the Red Cross or various relief groups require coupons, Mrs. Roosevelt said—but second-hand clothing does not.

Enjoy Harvesting

American soldiers from the farm belts have had a grand time helping with the British harvest, she declared, and more often than not have tried to convert the British farmers "to the way it really should be done." Invariably, she said, the soldiers like the British "after they have been there a time."

"When they first arrive, of course, they don't like anything," the First Lady laughed. "Everything is awful to them. You can just about tell how long a boy has been over by his reaction when you ask him about the British."

Mrs. Roosevelt paid a special tribute to the women and girls working in the land army. Many city girls working in the army declare they never wish to return to urban life, she said.

Night Club Closings Here Urged

McCarran Favors Suspending Those With Irremedial Fire Perils for Duration

Closing of all night clubs where irremediable fire hazards exist for the duration of the war was recommended for the District yesterday by Senator Pat McCarran, chairman of the Senate District Committee, as an aftermath of the Cocoanut Grove tragedy in Boston.

At the same time the Senator announced his full committee would meet at 2 p. m. today to consider fire safety legislation for the District.

In the meantime the District government had moved equally fast to remedy for any existing hazards.

Assistant Corporation Counsel James W. Lauderdale finished revision of th e"fire escape" bill and sent it to Senator McCarran's office early in the morning.

Committee Gets Bill Today

This bill will be before the full Senate District Committee for consideration today.

The revised measure gives the District Commissioners power to enact fire safety regulations over all buildings in the District which are 30 feet high or more, other than private residences. This would include practically all two-story non-residential buildings and all of the three-story buildings.

They may require suitable means of egress, guide signs, guide lights, exit lights, hall and stairway lights, standpipes, fire extinguishers, alarm gongs, striking stations and such other safety appliances as they see fit.

It also provides that such regulations shall be met by any occupant of a building within 30 days after receiving written notice of the requirement.

Those failing to comply with the regulation would be subject to a fine of from $10 to $100 a day for each day he failed to comply.

Empowered to Aid

If the occupant or owner still refused to comply with the regulations, the Commissioners are empowered to make such improvements as they deem fit and assess the costs against the building.

In addition, the Commissioners may obtain an injunction forbidding the occupancy of any building where the regulations are violated.

These are the same provisions as were included in the original bill as it was introduced in the House in 1941, as an aftermath of the White Court Apartment fire.

The law would prove "very helpful," Stephen T. Porter, chief engineer of the Fire Department, said when told of the speedy action taken.

"The bill will go a long way toward correcting any fire hazards that may exist in the District," he continued.

Inspections Planned

Porter said his department was making full preparations for the inspection of all public gathering places to determine the fire hazards that now exist, in line with the orders of the Commissioners, and Senator McCarran's stand.

In the meantime Lauderdale said that he had been notified by at least four firms handling fire escapes that they were in position to install them, with materials on hand.

"I had one firm tell me they had at least 30 tons of materials in stock now," Lauderdale said. "I remember at least three more gave me similar information."

Under the provisions of the new bill as it now stands, he explained, the Commissioners would not be required to compel the installation of fire escapes on all buildings, if they thought there existed a shortage in required materials. The same would apply in all other regulations they would make.

Your Baby and Mine

Is Grandma Right? Does Baby Need a Binder?

By Myrtle Meyer Eldred

The conflict between the ideas of parent and child is a constant one. Grandparents remembered that their children "got along" all right the way they were reared and so they are disrespectful of the "new" ideas these children advocate.

It's just as well to look beneath our own attitudes to discover why, as grandparents, we are so set against our children's ideas, or behavior. Is it because we are suffering from a sense of frustration because we seem no longer to be needed by our children?

Are parents resentful of the advice of grandparents only because their apparent domination implies that the parent hasn't yet grown up?

If the grandparent is aware of this deep inner need of the parent to be independent of her, she will know how to give advice so that it won't be offensive. Later, when the parent has her independence firmly established, she won't be so touchy about the way in which she follows the grandparent's suggestions, provided, of course, they are good ones.

"Please tell me if it is necessary to keep bands on my baby after the navel is healed? So many of my friends still use bands and my mother says she used them on us until we were one year old. They tell me it is supposed to do something for the baby's back—make it stronger or something, and also prevent ruptures. Personally I don't agree with them. I'd appreciate your opinion."

It was the custom 25 years or so ago to remove the tight binder at about six weeks and replace it with a knitted band with shoulder straps and tabs for the diapers. Now the binder comes off along with the navel dressing, its chief usefulness being to keep that bunglesome pad in place.

The knitted band can still be useful as a sleeveless shirt in spring and fall, but neither of these has any value as a means of keeping the baby's back straight or to prevent ruptures.

We may surmise with safety that nature provides the baby with a backbone and muscles to support it if we can be patient about expecting baby to sit erect until his development influences him to pull himself up.

As for ruptures, they are usually present at birth but show up later when the binder is removed. If there is a rupture a binder is not the proper dressing for it. The doctor will manage that support with adhesive tape.

Our leaflet, "The First Six Weeks," will help the mother to get baby started on a proper routine. This may be had by sending a 3-cent stamped, self-addressed envelope with your request to Myrtle Meyer Eldred in care of this newspaper.

TOMORROW: It's mother's job to control herself.

"Isn't it exciting about Mme. Chiang Kai-shek's being over here?"

"I should say so! I wonder what's back of it."

"Well, I'm not supposed to tell this, but—Say! LOOK at Valerie Nertz! Did you EVER see such an adorable lapel pin! What on earth is it?"

"It looks like a glass rhinosceros."

"I'd say it was a caribou—wait! . . . Say this woman next to me says it's an African groundhog . . . in brown glass with amber bristles."

"Valerie always was the cleverest thing! Well, what were you saying about Mme. Chiang Kai-chek?"

"Oh yes! Well it seems—say don't look now, but when you get a chance take in Sylvia Husk. She's got on that coral tippied tarantula with the diamond eyes that Stu gave her—after he got in that last scrape."

"I think you're exactly right, Mrs. Broadloom! We ought to be doing something about the peace this very minute! By the way, I love that little Chinese coolie you're wearing."

"Thank you. That's a charming Nubian head you have on."

"Thank you. This suit needed something and I thought I ought to have an African touch—at a time like this . . . Say, what do you think of the Darlan matter?"

"Well, this is what I think—say, isn't that Mrs. Atterbury Husk over there—with the little Spanish bullfighter on her lapel?"

"It is for a fact!"

"I was just wondering . . . you know her husband's very close to the State Department . . ."

"Oh, hello, Daphne! Still busy with South America—oh, what an adorable fur Scottie!"

"I love your little leather pony."

"Thank you. Say, did you see Adelaide Veneer?"

"You mean her mahogany cockroach?"

"Yes, isn't it the smartest thing you ever saw? It simply makes her suit."

"That's what I told her. But the one who's the knockout is Margo Wack."

"What's she got?"

"A louse! Made of plastic! With jeweled tentacles! You simply can't get near her for the crowd."

"Depend on Margo to do something like that. Where on earth did she get it?"

"She won't tell. I understand she has some very exclusive costume jewelry connections in New York."

"I was just talking to the Baroness Stucco. She says she has some inside information on where Hitler's going to strike."

"Is she the one with the little Egyptian mummy?"

"Yes; you know her husband's in Egypt. She's perfectly fascinating. You know she's a cousin of Joyce Preen."

"Where is Joyce this afternoon?"

"She's home. She said she didn't have anything to wear."

"The idea!"

"Well, she said she hadn't been able to find any gadget for her new suit and it made her feel too naked to wear it plain."

"Say, listen! She's here! And she's got it on!"

"Who? What?"

"Claudia Whiffleby! With her goldfish!"

"No! Not the one that's causing the divorce?"

"Yes!"

"Where is she? What's it like?"

"In that crowd over by the punch bowl. It's a little glass vase with a narrow neck and tied with ribbon so it can pin on. And inside swimming around in water is a REAL LIVE GOLDFISH!"

"You're sure it's the same one that got Nick Steppit so excited?"

"Yes, because she wore it the first time to the Trotter's party, and he saw it and asked for an introduction and they got to talking about politics and philosophy and love and everything and Pam got mad at Nick and went home alone."

"And now she's gone to Reno! Poor Pam!"

"Well, of course Pam never did try to keep up with Nick. She's terribly old-fashioned."

"Yes, the last time I saw her she was still wearing a jeweled flower basket."

As long as the paint needs cleaning, why not do it with the least possible effort? There is a special preparation available that removes dirt and grease from painted surfaces—besides leaving a polished finish! No rinsing or drying is necessary, and we can recommend it also as excellent for cleaning Venetian blinds . . . 60 cents a quart.

Drape pleats are out for "zoot suits" but are within the law on your curtains or drapery. However, you needn't spend hours doing it by hand! For 15c a yard you can get a strip of material that you sew to the back of your curtains. Then just slip the rod through the holes in this ready-made pleater and there are your evenly-spaced pleats with a professional look. Uncle Sam Played Santa in 1917

Uncle Sam's whiskers served him in good stead in 1917, when he played "Santa Claus" to the men in the A. E. F. stationed in France. He'll be using that experience to full advantage this year with A. E. F.'s stationed around the globe.

Many American soldiers, away from home for the first time and in a strange land during that World War I, expected to find Christmas a bleak and dreary business.

The men moving up to the trenches were not forgotten. Hundreds of thousands of parcels from the Red Cross, families, friends, civic clubs and women's groups, poured across the ocean. Army postoffice clerks could barely keep up with the load.

Prime turkeys went across, too. Enough gobblers and gravy, cranberry sauce and mince pie were on hand for every man in the A. E. F. And the soldiers nibbled the wings with as much gusto as they had ever done at home.

It might have been a sad Christmas for men bedded in base hospitals in France. But for the occasion nurses of the Red Cross had borrowed Uncle Sam's Santa togs—and gala Christmas parties were the order in every ward. Each sick and wounded sailor and soldier received a special gift—cigarettes and candy, toothbrushes and soap. Christmas trees adorned the wards, and there were amateur theatricals, carol singing, and motion pictures.

The soldiers took advantage of an opportunity to act the part of St. Nicholas themselves, too. The word got around that thousands of French refugee children, many of them orphans, had given up on Santa. After four years of war and privation, they had neglected even to put their wooden shoes outside the door—a French custom equivalent to the hanging up of stockings in America.

But the doughboys restored the children's faith. With the help of the Red Cross and the Quakers, they visited homes of the poor to distribute candy and balloons, tiny dogs and bunnies, warm coats and dresses. They helped set up tiny Christmas trees, adorned by French and American flags.

Speechmaking Is an Art, Governed by Basic Rules; Persuasive Eloquence Is Cultured Achievement Of the First Order; Stagefright Natural to Novice

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Last Friday you discussed a letter from a young wife and mother, 37, who asked how to overcome her dread of speechmaking, which has afflicted her ever since school days. In her junior year at college, she fainted from fright, she says, while giving a report before her class. And today she is terror-stricken, losing sleep and generally becoming a nervous wreck, as the time draws near for delivering a club report. Since I have had experience in training some 500 persons in effective speaking during the last seven years, I would like to add something to your well-reasoned recommendations.

In my teaching work, I have dealt with many pupils, men and women, who were just as frightened as your correspondent, "E. W. V." And while I agree with you that much of this fear stems from neurotic roots, I do not feel that it is necessary to rely entirely upon the psychiatric approach to correct the condition; or, perhaps better said, to bring it under social control. Such fears are often brought into the open by a feeling of not knowing "how to do," in emergency. For instance, if a person of habitually anxious temperament were asked to drive a car in downtown traffic, without practiced knowledge of the technique of car driving, you might well expect him to faint from fright if put to the test. The sensible thing to do, in that case, would be to refuse to attempt the impossible, of course.

But for some unknown reason, the average person, until he learns better, seems to take for granted that speaking before a group "just comes natural." He can't understand why he, or anybody else, should be scared of an audience. Yet, when put to the test, he is afraid; often almost paralyzed by stage fright. I have found this due to many reasons, the most familiar of which are: (1) Not knowing how to organize subject matter for effective delivery. (2) Failure to take the intellectual measure of an audience in advance (while preparing material), so that one has a sense of sure footing in putting a message across. And (3) unawareness of the fact that 99 able speakers in every 100 are the product of either formal training or a chastening session in the School of Experience. Also, the majority of newcomers to the platform don't know what assets they have (and what general faults to guard against) in the speaker's role. For instance, at a recent meeting, the speaker was an Army officer and university graduate. As he spoke, his knees were trembling visibly. And when later told that he had "everything it takes" to capture an audience, his eyes popped in astonishment and he said "For heaven's sake! What have I got? Tell me quickly."

English Are Trained In Ready Utterance

In England, where I lived for some years, poised and ready speakers are the general rule among the educated classes—so that at first I thought they must have been born that way. Then I learned the reason why English men and women and even little children express themselves so fluently. Beginning with the second grade and on through school, children are taught oral composition one day and written composition the next, on the sound theory that speaking and writing are two distinctly different media of expression, requiring the development of separate techniques. In our country, we have long been taught to express ourselves (at least to some degree) in writing. But the art of speaking has been almost wholly neglected by our educational system. Which is odd, when you consider that we all speak a great deal more than we write; that effective speaking is a cultural achievement, based on a formal technique; and that the ability to give logical extemporaneous expression to thought is very important to our success in life.

Frankly, I consider our national inability to think straight and speak forcefully on our feet to be a threat to our democracy. For how can we uphold the democratic way of life if we cannot find the words to express and defend our deepest convictions? Mrs. Roosevelt made this point, in a speech delivered here in 1941, in which she said: "I believe it would be a very valuable thing if we would urge upon schools and colleges that first they train youngsters in talking about things they are interested in, in their daily lives; and then that they train them to express what they feel later on about the meaning of democracy to them, the meaning of this country to them, what they know about its conditions, what they want to see done . . . I do not see, unless our youngsters (are taught to) do this, how we can expect them to have the fervor, the knowledge and the enthusiasm for our way of life and our form of government which is being instilled in the young people today who subscribe to different beliefs and different forms of government." Mrs. Roosevelt has proved her example by her honest belief in the importance of elocutionary study. It is no secret that she took voice training lessons for public speaking some years ago; and that her effectiveness as a public speaker was greatly improved in consequence.

Three Factors Involved In Effective Lecturing

As I have said, effective public speaking is a cultural achievement; which is to say, a definite art that, at its best, embodies complete fusion of logical thought and deep feeling with forceful verbal expression, resulting in that moving eloquence of language of which Britain's Prime Minister Churchill is past master. It calls for a special way of thinking, for a definite technique of speaking and for due consideration of the type of audience to be addressed. Being an art, it is governed by certain fundamental rules; and to know these rules is to establish control over those weak-kneed sensations commonly called "stage fright." I have had only two students who were unable to conquer their fears sufficiently to become effective speakers during their period of intensive training. One of these, I later learned, was afflicted by pernicious anemia. And the other—as much to his surprise as mine—began to get his bearings and speak up in meetings within a month after he had ended the course!

Exercise Is Restful, After a Long Day at the Office

By Ida Jean Kain

IDA JEAN KAIN

It is hard to convince the tired business girl that exercise will rest her. Just broach the subject and she draws back and lets you have it—"After the way I work all day, I am so tired I can scarcely drag one foot ahead of the other. Don't say 'exercise' to me!"

That's what you might call brain fag. It tells you in no uncertain terms that you are tired of having things to do, but doing a few vigorous exercises is the antidote. The muscular activity stirs up the circulation and sends a fresh flow of blood to the brain and nerve centers. You feel refreshed almost immediately and you will be pleasantly fatigued and better able to relax later on.

You brain workers are very much inclined to think you don't need strong backs, so why exercise? But the muscles you use all day long are the small ones, especially those of the eyes. Laundering and keeping your clothes in repair prolongs the use of the same muscles. Then, for diversion you go to the movies, and when you go to bed you read yourself to sleep. None of those things is exercise for the powerful trunk, leg and arm muscles. Any activity that uses them is a change and a rest.

You don't have to do calisthenics. You can bowl, skate, play badminton, or do any type of sports that gives play to your muscles. But you may not have the chance to play regularly and you can always depend on walking and a set of exercises. If walking is your only concession to conditioning, you should be able to average a mile in about 20 minutes and should stay out for an hour. Just 15 minutes setting-up exercises will keep you in trim. Have a fresh circulation of air in the room, don't wear binding clothing, and do the kind of exercises which get at the midsection. Here are some good ones.

Lie on back on floor, legs stretched straight down, arms straight up on floor. Swing right leg up from hip, left arm down from shoulder and touch fingers to toes. Return to position and repeat with other arm and leg. Keep the stomach flat, small of back against floor. Continue for 20 counts.

Lie on floor on back with hips close to wall, legs stright up the wall, arms stretched on floor beyond head. Flex one knee to chest, and bend elbows to touch hands to shoulders. Then thrust that leg up wall as you flex other leg and stretch arms up above head on floor. Try to make the movements rhythmical. Keep going for 20 counts.

For a third exercise, stand up and stretch tall, hands clasped on top of head and elbows out at sides in line with shoulders. Have feet parallel, and hold hips still, and slowly bend acutely sideward. Return to position and bend to other side. Repeat 10 times, relax.

The business girl could well emulate Joyce Reynolds, screen beauty, in porforming the illustrated exercises, which bring into play hip and trunk muscles. Office workers who sit at desks for hours would accomplish much toward a fitness program by including in their daily routine 15 minutes of these exercises

Absorb Stains

An absorbent such as French chalk or Fuller's Earth is quite successful for removing fresh wine stains. Spread a layer of absorbent on stained fabric which is lying on a flat surface. Shake off absorbent when it becomes gummy. Repeat. Then spread another layer of absorbent and leave overnight.

Don't Be A Christmas Fullback

After you have mailed your Christmas packages, will the postoffice clerks be wearing smiles, or pickled pepper looks?

The way you behave will decide it.

There are always some people who never do their homework. They address packages so carelessly that the addresses are illegible. They fail to evaluate contents and stall on the answers in the postoffice. They wrap packages carelessly and hold up a line of other Christmas-package-mailers while they argue with the clerk.

Others have an allergy to lines. They push the people in front of them. They step on the other fellow's foot. Or they try to crash into the line at the top, instead of taking a place at the end. And when finally they reach the window they speak with exasperated rudeness to the clerk.

If you recognize yourself among them, better mend your ways.

Save Iron Cord

Don't let the iron cord brush against the hot iron or rub on the edge of the board. The insulation won't wear out as readily, too, if you wait until the iron cools before wrapping the cord around it.

Fuel Rationing May Bring Health Hazards

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

ANYONE READING my article yesterday on fuel rationing will understand that I do not regard low temperature as necessarily being a health hazard. Our homes and offices have been so overheated and kept so dry in the past few years that I believe this has dried out the mucous membranes of the nose and throat and induced colds rather than prevented them. Lower temperatures, with the body kept warm and the skin kept comfortable by added clothing, will probably be a gain rather than a loss.

Dr. Clendening

Hazards do exist, however, especially with those who are changing over to older forms of heating, the details of which they may have forgotten. Probably the greatest hazard in changing over from fuel oil to other forms of heating will be the danger of setting the house on fire. There is an enormous death rate that is fairly steady, occurring, naturally, mostly in the winter, due to pepole being trapped in burning homes. A large proportion of these fires are traced to dirty, overheated stoves, furnaces, flues and pipes. Experienced men should inspect all heating apparatus and their recommendations for cleaning and repairing should be heeded.

The average householder who has been using fuel oil may have forgotten some of the precautions he used to take when he was using coal in the furnace. A fire may be started from hot ashes carelessly placed in wood or other combustible containers or mixed with rubbish.

It seems superfluous to mention it, but there is still an enormous death rate among people who start or speed up a fire in the grate or stove by pouring on kerosene.

Open fireplaces in the United States have become more or less a thing of the past and the householder should be reminded that unless screened, these fires may be the cause of serious burns by setting fire to clothing, especially the clothing of children.

Gas or oil heaters without flues in poorly ventilated rooms, if allowed to burn for any length of time, may result in death from carbon monoxide poisoning. Anybody changing over to gas should be sure that all the detachable tubing is tight and sound so that leaks will not occur.

Asphyxiation comes on not only from this source but also when coal stoves or furnace pipes become disconnected or rusted, or when the dampers are so set that partially burned gases escape into the house.

A great many people are planning to save fuel by keeping their windows closed, whereas under ordinary circumstances in the past they would always have some windows open—even on the coldest days. This attitude of mind is a distinct hazard in itself, because an open window which admits ventilation will do much to prevent any possible danger from heating apparatus with which the householder may not be familiar, such as those mentioned above. It is better to be uncomfortable, cold or moderately uncomfortable rather than to take chances with the heating apparatus.

Michael's Girl

By SOPHIE KERR

Chapter 47

"I suppose a father should be glad to be treated as an equal, not as an inferior," he said to Elin wryly.

"It's his age," said Elin. "They know it all at 17. It must be wonderful to be like that."

"You always excuse him," grumbled Philip, "but it's all right. I want him to be independent. But now and then when he calmly contradicts me on something I know about, it does grate."

Between Elin and Philip confidence had come back, not always quite complete or without unspoken questions, but for the most part with a new understanding and tolerance. He had prevailed on her to give up the library. "Now that old Derboek and I have cut our first melon you must use some of it; that's what it's for. You're half sick, you're nervous, you're tired—what do you want to do, kill yourself? Please, Elin, take it easy for a while."

"I'm glad to stop," Elin said. "It's too much for me, I know it. Besides, there's a girl I've heard of who needs a part-time job; her father's not well and she can't be away all day so afternoon work's just the thing for her."

"Oh, yes, yes—my son pays no attention at all to my wishes and my wife only pays attention when they can be hitched up to something benevolent. I wish you'd do something selfish, Elin, plain common selfish, for your own pleasure and nothing else."

"Very well. I'll ask a selfish favor of you, Phil, for my own pleasure and nothing else. I want to keep on with my friends down in town and I want you to be nice to them just because I like them. I know you never cared about them, but if I drop them now when there's no reason for me to be down there everyday, well—I'll miss them."

"You do whatever you like," said Philip, "and I'll behave like a little gentleman. Promise."

Became at Ease

He found small effort in kepeing his word, for his dealing with the Derboek tenants and property employes had leveled the world to him and destroyed his fancied superiority; he saw the men and women he met more honestly. So, cautiously, with distrust gradually waning on both sides, Philip found himself more of a towrisman. Dr. Kelly could give him a sharp battle at golf; the bank cashier and a couple of local business men could make a monkey out of him at tennis or bridge. Some of the older men talked to him about his father, stirring generous memories and a naive, filial pride he had never before known.

"Do you realize," he asked Eli, "that my father died when he was younger than I am now, when I was only a little more than Van's age? I wish he'd lived—he wouldn't have been so old, 78. I like hearing these old boys down in town talk about him; it brings things back. You know, Elin, I was pretty young to have everything handed over to me and my mother ill and miserable and not wanting to be bothered with the business of the estate. I made a lot of mistakes."

"You admit it?" asked Elin, smiling.

"Now, no rough stuff—I get enough of that from Derbock, Elin, darling — everything's changed since I'm back with you. I feel as if I had a new pair of eyes. I feel younger—and older, both at once. What's the use—I'm trying to say the unsayable."

"You don't need to say it. I know. Let's go down to the garden. Michael has a new idea about it."

Michael was already there, training a spray-gun on the border. "The aphis are out again," he said, "by the millions. And last night there wasn't one. The more I see of insects the more I think they're the original curse. The snake in the garden of Eden was no serpent but a caterpillar."

Plans for a Garden

"Tell us about the new plan, Michael," said Elin.

Michael straightened and gestured. "I want to move the white rhododendrons there at the end to the other side of the house along the drive, and along with them that small pink dogwood, making a deep point there. Then I'd plant azaleas and ilex on each side, bringing the line up in a curve, a very gentle one, to meet the flowering border. What turf I'd cut off at the side I'd use to sod over the point. D'you see the line and what it makes looking from the center of the terrace?"

"Why, it's practically heart-shaped, isn't it?" said Philip.

Michael gave a delighted whoop. "It's so! And if you can see it before it's there, it will go fine! It will be the Garden of the Heart."

Elin and Philip were silent. "That's a piece of real sentiment," said Elin at last.

"It suits the house," said Michael, "I never just liked the shape of this plot, too square and boxy. But with the point there and the curve of the sides coming up to the curve of the border—you like it, Mis' Elin, don't you?"

"Yes, I like it," said Elin, "very much, Michael."

When they had gone back into the house Elin said, "He's happy now that he's not worrying about Letty having that money. It would have dislocated everything—a fortune like that."

Philip waved Michael's affairs aside. "Listen, Elin, I've an idea for you and me. I've snaffled the promise of a week's vacation out of old Derboek. Let's buy a new little car and go off somewhere and have ourselves a time. What d'you say?"

"Not take Van?"

"Certainly not. He's so much the head of the house, let him stay here and lord it over everything and everybody. He wouldn't want to go anyway; he's got so much to do in his little-plant business and playing baseball with his gang and taking Letty to the early shows at the movies——"

"You don't like that, Phil, do you?"

"I do and I don't. There's no actual objection to Letty, I suppose—but they're so young. He ought to get around and see other girls—girls of another sort. They're just kids, of course, but I don't want him to get tied up too early. They're together practically all the time. Oh, don't look at me—I'll admit it, I'm still a little jealous of Letty."

"They make me think of Paul and Virginia."

"I'm not very strong on the classics, but that romance ended badly, didn't it? But what are we talking about? He's got four years at college — there'll be plenty of new girls at proms and parties. He won't stick at home every weekend."

"He won't change," said Elin. "He's like me that way. When's your vacation, darling? There's nothing in the world I'd like so much as running off with you."

Philip stooped to kiss her. "I wish you weren't so much too good for me!"

"Oh, I'm not. I only pretend to be such an angel."

"You're not an angel, thank the Lord. But you're—what's the use! You're the tops, Elin. And listen, before we go I want you to hire another maid. You and Jean do too much in the house and if Patsy wasn't a horse she'd have been dead of overwork long before this. And I want you to buy some frisky new clothes, lots of 'em."

"But if we get a new car, Phil?"

"Don't you care. I can pay for it all. Derboek is yelling his head off because of one sale I pushed him into making that'll net me plenty. We're going to get some fun out of what I'm making while we go along."

"Phil, you've changed so much!"

"You like me better, though, this way?"

"Yes—I like you better—but I love you any way you are."

"You're just crazy."

"Yes," said Elin, "and I like that, too. When do we go on this trip?"

"In about three weeks. Why don't you ask Bill down for a couple of days while we're away. It might settle up things between him and Jean."

Van heard the news of their going with judicial pleasure. "That's fine; Mother needs a vacation," was his comment. "And it'll be swell to have a new car—the old one's got senile dementia."

"Where did you get that word?" asked Elin, amused.

"Don Kelly. He got it from his father. And listen, parents, don't worry about things while you're away. I can look after everything."

Billy Mitchell's Sister, Member of Famed Serb Guerilla Band, Speaks to Newspaper Women

By Genevieve Reynolds
The Post Club Editor

Make no mistake—every German is responsible for the atrocities of Hitler and the Nazi army. Thus warned Miss Ruth Mitchell, sister of the late Brig. Gen. William (Billy) Mitchell.

Guest of honor and speaker at the American Newspaper Women's Club's tea Monday afternoon, she said the whole soul of Germany was warped and twisted.

The only foreign woman ever admittted to membership in the Chetniks, Serbian guerilla organization still harassing the Axis in the mountains of Yugoslavia, Miss Mitchell to'd of her capture by the Gestapo and her experiences in 11 jails.

Wearing the colorful brown, red-trimmed Chetnik uniform and heavy high-top boots, she drew a number of daggers to show to her audience. With a quiet voice, filled with emotion, she related the terrors of the Nazis. However, the quick-witted woman condemned to die, was able to fool the Germans—at least on two points. They knew everything about her except that she was the sister of Billy Mitchell and had a son in the R. A. F.

Harris & Ewing

Mrs. Edward Everett Gann, president of the District of Columbia League of Republican Women (left), examines carefully a dagger shown her by Ruth Mitchell (right), only foreign woman ever admitted to membership in the Chetniks. Miss Michell, wearing her Chetnik uniform, was guest of honor and speaker at the American Newspaper Women's Club tea

Tells of Horrors

Once she was able to persuade the Gestapo to remove her from a room where she was sleeping with the "women of the streets" in a filthy, dark jail. She pointed out that it was the Nazi custom to lock up the women of the streets for protection and to leave the others to be attacked and raped by the German soldiers.

When the Germans marched into Yugoslavia they took all the intellectuals and older students, dug trenches, put them in and mowed them down with tanks and machine guns. These were only a few of the horrors she saw inflicted on her friends and the innocent people of that country. Each day while in prison, Miss Mitchell was drugged.

Declaring again that the Germans were responsible for every atrocity, she said our soldiers would not carry out such orders of merciless treatment to innocents. Fearful that after the war people will start saying, "You can't blame the German people, it was only Hitler's rotten party that caused all the trouble," she emphasized the fact that such a system could not exist unless the people of the nation were solidly behind it.

Women Debased

After witnessing so much suffering in Europe, Miss Mitchell said it made her ill to hear people grumbling about lack of nylons, sugar rationing and other minor sacrifices.

Missionary to Speak Friday On Experience in Korean Jail

How he was thrown into a Korean jail and held there for four months with a view to compelling him to sign over Mission property to the government of Japan, will be told by the Rev. J. V. N. Talmage, D. D., missionary of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S., at the Mount Vernon Place Methodist Church at 2:30 p. m. Friday.

The occasion is the annual fall rally of the Washington Auxiliary of the American Mission to Lepers, Inc. The Auxiliary, of which Mrs. G. C. D. Townsend, 1631 Montague Street Northwest, is president, and Miss Annie Blair, 1303 Floral Street Northwest, is treasurer, carries on an active program among churches of all Protestant denominations in the city and Capital District, raising last year $4852 for the Christian care and healing of people with leprosy throughout the world.

Dr. Talmage was left in charge of the Biederwolf Leper Colony near Soonchun, Korea, early in 1941, and very soon after found himself the only male missionary of his church left in the country. Immediately following the attack on Pearl Harbor, he was placed under guard and, early in 1942, arrested under pretext of possessing a government map (in reality a map of his own leper colony which he himself had prepared at the request of the government), and thrown into jail. His persistent refusal to sign a document which would voluntarily surrender the leper colony and other mission property to the government without the necessity of a wartime seizure, kept him in the jail for four months, and for part of that time under severe privations. He was finally released under repatriation orders, for return on the Gripsholm.

Also on the program of the Washington meeting will be Mrs. Ida Patterson Storm, Ph. D., wife of W. Harold Storm, M. D., medical missionary to Arabia. Mrs. Storm will speak out of some years of experience as a professor at the University of Shanghai, Shanghai, Chnia, and among the fierce Bedouin tribes of Arabia. Mrs. Storm will wear a beautiful gold-trimmed robe given her by a king in recognitio nof services rendered.

The American Mission to Lepers, Inc., is an organization having an independent board of directors but acting as the auxiliary body of all Protestant missions which carry on a ministry anywhere in the world for people with leprosy. It gives financial aid to approximately 100 mission stations in 29 countries. Although 21 of these stations are at present temporarily out of communication, the mission is called upon for a full schedule of aid to the remaining 79 stations where the costs have been made greater than ever, and supplies and staff harder to find on account of the war. The directors of the mission also expect conquered areas, such as Burma, Thailand, occupied China and the Philippine Islands to emerge from Japanese occupation sooner than is sometimes thought, and they are accordingly building up a "reconstruction fund" to meet the debts, repairs and other dire needs under which the occupied stations will then be suffering. The work of the mission has become even more significant since the outbreak of war because of the mission's service in giving instructions to American doctors in tropical diseases and tropical medicine.

Iceland Celebrates Its Twenty-Third Birthday

Harris & Ewing.

Miss Coryell Is Bride of C. S. Campbell

Bethlehem Chapel of the Washingfiton Cathedral was the setting for the wedding last evening of Miss Virginia Beverley Coryell of Washington, daughter of Mrs. Virginia Beverley Coryell of The Plains, Va., and Lieut. Colin Stuart Campbell, Royal Canadian Navy, of Halifax, Nova Scotia.

The ceremony at 8 o'clock was performed by the Rev. F. Bland Tucker of St. John's Church, Georgetown, in the presence of the two families and a few close friends.

John McGill of The Plains, uncle of the bride, gave her in marriage. She wore her grandmother's wedding gown of moire grosgrain satin fashioned with a tight sleeveless bodice and off-the-shoulder neckline finished with a bertha of heirloom lace. A panel of seed pearls on silver threads extended down the front of the full skirt, which was made with side panniers with a bustle back. Her long tulle veil was held with a cap of old lace. She carried an old-fashioned bouquet of white roses and gardenias.

Mrs. Robert Gooding of Alexandria, who was matron of honor, wore a gold chiffon and velvet gown, the close-fittting bodice of velvet, the skirt of chiffon. She carried an old-fashioned bouquet of yellow roses and bronze chrysanthemums and wore a cluster of chrysanthemums in her hair.

The maid of honor, Miss Dorothy Dovell, was in turquoise blue chiffon and velvet, the gown similar to that of the matron of honor, and she carried a similar bouquet.

Ensign Harry Murray, U. S. N. R., of Long Island, was best man and the ushers included Lieut. Marshall Beverley, U. S. N. R., of Alexandria; Ensign George Reymann, U. S. N. R., of Wheeling, W. Va., now in Washington; Charles McGill Smith of New Orleans and Gordon Dovell of Washington.

A small reception followed the ceremony at the home of the bride in Georgetown, and later Lieut. Campbell and his bride left for New York for a few days before going to Halifax, where they will make their home. For traveling Mrs. Campbell wore a Scotch brown tweed suit with a brown hat and accessories and a corsage of brown orchids.

Lieut. Campbell is the son of Mr. and Mrs. George D. Campbell of Weymouth, Nova Scotia, where the family has lived for generations on a large estate.

Miss Peterson Is Married

At another in the series of Capital service weddings recently, Miss Phyllis Durand Peterson, daughter of Mrs. Chapman Peterson and Alvin E. Peterson, became the bride of Lieut. Walter John Marx, U. S. A. A. C., son of Mrs. William N. Marx of Nome, Alaska, and the late Mr. Marx. The ceremony took place on November 16 in St. Joseph's Church with the Rev. Edward P. McAdams officiating.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her uncle, Wilmer S. Chapman, wore a gown of blush satin with a matching veil of tulle, caught by a coronet of orange blossoms. She carried a prayer book covered with white orchids and bouvardia. Miss Marion Wolberg was the maid of honor, and the bridesmaids were Miss Jean Gay of Tampa, Fla., Miss Katherine Becker and Miss Joan Spencer.

Edward S. Lazowska was the best man and the ushers were Wallace Frasher and Charles J. Nora. A breakfast for the bridal party at the Kennedy-Warren followed the ceremony.

Iceland's Independence Celebrated

Celebrating 23 years of independence for their country, the Minister of Iceland and Mme. Thors entertained yesterday afternoon at a reception in the Chinese Room of the Mayflower.

In 1919, Iceland and Denmark signed a treaty that gave Iceland its independence, though even at that time it was one of the oldest parliamentary governments in the world. In Iceland, yesterday, where American troops now make their headquarters, there were no firecrackers, no parades, no bands. For Iceland does not celebrate its Independence Day as the United States celebrates the Fourth of July. In Iceland it is a day of speeches, a day when the students of this little country review the national history.

About 400 Washingtonians accepted the gold-crested invitations of the first Icelandic envoy to this country and his wife to come in between 5:30 and 7:30 o'clock and help them celebrate their national holiday. High-ranking officials were in the late afternoon gathering, as were diplomatic representatives from the United Nations. More than a sprinkling of gold braid gave a military emphasis to the throng that formed a steady two-hour queue at the receiving line.

Mrs. Imbrie Departs

Mrs. Robert Whitney Imbrie left yesterday for Long Island, where she will be for a week or 10 days.

MISS ANNE GARLAND

whose parents have announced her engagement and approaching marriage to Dwight Edward Zeller, son of Mr. and Mrs. Simon Zeller of Washington. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Chisholm Garland of Edgewood, Pittsburgh. The wedding will take place in Pittsburgh December 22, followed by a reception at the College Club. Miss Garland attended Purdue University and is a member of Kappa Alpha Theta sorority. Her fiance, who graduates from Purdue University in December, is a member of Delta Tau Delta and the Catylist Club.

Newlyweds To Make Home In Maryland

Upon their return from a wedding trip to New York, Mr. and Mrs. Kirkwood Hamilton Denham, will make their home at 930 Wayne Avenue in Silver Spring.

Before her marriage on November 21, the bride was Miss Florence L. Kudolla, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Martin A. Kudolla of Washington. The ceremony took place at the Second Baptist Church, with the Rev. J. Ray Garrett officiating. Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a gown of light ivory satin, a finger-tip veil of illusion held by a coronet of seed pearls and carried a bouquet of stephanotis and orchids.

Miss Polly Ann Novomesky, the maid of honor was attired in blue faille and bridesmaids were Miss Margaret Smithdale, Miss Mariana Rixey and Miss Mary Conlon. James Denham was his brother's best man.

Arthur Newsome, Jr. Coast Guard, Weds Dorothy Bennett

In a service wedding of last weekend, Miss Dorothy Albra Bennett, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Bennett, became the bride of Arthur Ernest Newsome, jr., son of Mrs. Harold J. Gallagher and Arthur Newsome. The Saturday ceremony took place in the St. Stephens Lutheran Church with the Rev. George K. Bowers officiating. A reception followed at the home of the bride's parents.

The bride wore a powder blue dress and matching hat and carried an old fashioned bouquet of white roses and daisies. Miss Melba Bennett, a sister of the bride, and Mrs. Howard Kramer of Baltimore, were the attendants. Chief Petty Officer James William Adams, an uncle of the bridegroom, was best man.

The bridegroom, now a member of the Coast Guard, is stationed at Manhattan Beach, Brooklyn, N. Y., attending the Quartermaster's School.

"I Kiss Your Hand, Madame," Says Jurist to Countess

Countess Immortalized In Biography of Holmes

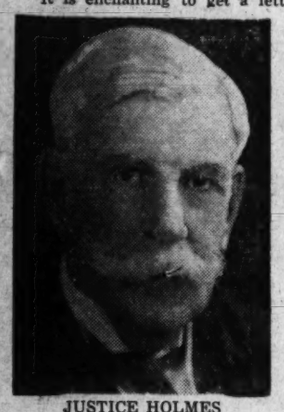
Letters to Washington Resident From Late Justice Add Sparkle to Volume By Attorney General Francis Biddle

By Marie McNair

In Attorney General Francis Biddle's refreshing biography on the late Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes, running in part in Harper's Magazine, the name Countess Eleanor Palffy springs from the pages.

Reference to the charming Countess Palffy comes with the occasion of the celebration of Justice Holmes' ninetieth birthday anniversary, a congratulatory letter from the countess bringing forth a complimentary note in return.

"It is enchanting to get a letter from you," the Justice wrote. "Doubly enchanting to get this letter. When I am free to drive out in an automobile, I frequently go up through the Riverside and return through Georgetown and always think of your coming down the steps to come with me to Fort Stevens. You left such a vivid impression that, so long as it was possible, I always was hoping that you would come again. Great expectations, but circumstances prevented your coming. Your letter arrived this morning and it has made the day happy. One doesn't meet enchantresses every day and old as I am I still can sit up and take notice."



JUSTICE HOLMES

To those who know the Countess Palffy, that is indeed a very fitting tribute.

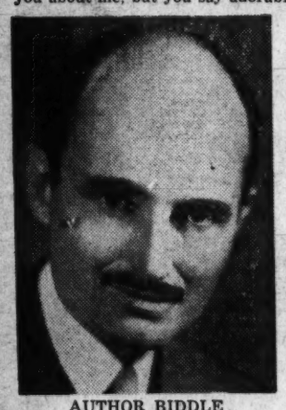
Newcomer to Washington last year the Countess is spending the Autumn with her sister, Mrs. E. R. Curtis, at Cressbrook Farm, her home at Norfolk, Mass., to be near her young grandson, Nelson W. Aldrich, and to have him with her on weekend holidays from school.

American born, widely traveled, Countess Palffy returned from abroad three years ago, went first to Boston and then came to Washington where she stepped immediately into a prominent part in Red Cross relief work.

COUNTESS PALFFY

Experience in the first World War stood her in good stead. Then she organized women's work in the Y. M. C. A. huts, did personnel work such as interviewing and selecting overseas candidates, arranging entertainment programs. When World War II broke over Europe, Countess Palffy came home, organized and taught Red Cross aides in Boston; served as vice chairman of Red Cross Nurses Aides in Washington which also included radio addresses, public speaking and preparing articles for newspapers.

Her friendship for the great jurist goes back a number of years. And Justice Holmes revealed a real appreciation of that friendship when he concluded his letter with, "I wish you had told me as much about yourself as I have told you about me, but you say adorable things. I kiss your hands . . ."



AUTHOR BIDDLE

Enclosed in the envelope was the Justice's radio speech which he gave from his library at the house on Eye Street, his home for many years, on the eve of his ninetieth birthday. Gathered about him then were the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, the Dean of the Yale Law School, the president of the American Bar Association, each with a word of homage on his lips. And so, when his turn came, Justice Holmes closed his brief message of greeting with these words:

"And so I end with a line from a Latin poet who uttered the message more than 1500 years ago: "Death plucks my ear and says, Live—I am coming."

Army Camps No Longer One-Night Show Stands

Entertainment for Soldiers Greatly Expanded; Alfredo Is Loyal to the Family Tradition; Items of News and Gossip of the Theater

THE ENTERTAINMENT of service men in approximately 700 Army camps throughout the United States is taking on new dimensions with the arrival of Lieut. Col. Marvin Young of the Special Service Division, United States Army, in Hollywood to confer with the Hollywood Victory Committee and USO-Camp Shows, Inc.

AL JOLSON

The hit-and-run practice of romping a unit show into a camp for a performance or two and then right out again seems to be going by the board. Forecasting the most pretentious program of soldier entertainment to be undertaken since the Victory Committee was organized, three days after Pearl Harbor, Lieut. Col. Young has revealed plans for a new type of celebrity tour. The War Department, he makes known, wants players to spend as much as a week's time at some of the larger, isolated camps; not to give shows, but to mingle with the troops in their daily routines, breakfasting with one outfit, lunching with another and visiting the rifle range or other training grounds with still others.

Arrangements also are under way for the routing of "spot" shows, in cooperation with USO-Camp Shows, Inc., to all sections of the country. That old one-night-stand business is out. These traveling troupes will play engagements lasting as long as two to four weeks in some areas, in order that they may be enjoyed by all divisions. The peak in this type of camp entertainment is expected to be reached in January, when it is hoped to have units visiting every camp in the United States.

In preparation for the new program the Hollywood Victory Committee is checking every player enlisted in its wartime talent pool, so that the greatest galaxy of personalities yet to participate in a single phase of the war effort may be made available.

The committee also has in the making a big program of star tours to overseas and offshore bases, for which more than 100 of the screen's most prominent figures have volunteered their services.

If we had to make a guess we should say that Al Jolson, Joe E. Brown, Bob Hope and maybe Marlene Dietrich would be in the van of this last group.

The national premiere of "Henry Browne, Farmer," first all-Negro, war-time documentary film, was celebrated in A. E. Lichtman's Booker T. Theater last Friday night, with many prominent Government and military figures in attendance. A short patriotic program preceded the screening of the film. Members of the Department of Agriculture secretarial staff, dressed as farmerettes, served as ushers. Produced by the United States Department of Agriculture, "Henry Browne, Farmer," is now in national release through Republic Pictures. It treats of the wartime agricultural effort of the Negro-Americans in the Deep South and is highlighted by a sequence of the Ninety-ninth Pursuit Squadron, at Tuskegee Institute. Narration is by Canada Lee, well-known Negro radio announcer and recent star of "Native Son" on the stage. Worth seeing for various reasons.

Kiddies Will Have Yuletide Treat

"Pinocchio" will be played by the Clare Tree Major Children's Theater of New York at the National Theater during Christmas week. This will be second on the list of six plays constituting the Children's Theater's usual season. The curtain will rise at 10:30 o'clock on the morning of Tuesday, December 29, instead of on a Saturday, as is customary. There'll be color, excitement, enchantment, some hearty laughs and a tear or two, now and again, as the swift-moving scenes unfold. Remember when Walt Disney made it into one of his most engaging pictures?

The latest bit of news to trickle in concerning the Theater Guild's production of Konstantin Simonov's "The Russian People," scheduled for a fortnight's engagement at the National, beginning with its first-time-on-any-stage performance Monday night, December 14, is that Boris Aronson will design the settings. This is in the nature of an assurance of their authenticity.

My thanks to the charming Southern Sisters for the first Yule greetings of the season—smiling likenesses of themselves in classic pose. The girls believe in at least the partial unities. Their home address is given as 5806 Ohio Street, Chicago. So the card was mailed from Cincinnati, which is in Ohio, but not the street.

Loyal's Stallions—six French poodles and two Chihuahuas—currently featured on the stage bill at Loew's Capitol, are a slightly far cry from the originals of the act, when it consisted of six Andalusian stallions, trained to such feats as galloping backward on three legs and executing intricate ballet and folk dances on their hind legs. They, nevertheless, reveal something of the versatility of their trainer, Alfredo Loyal. Not so much, however, as the amazing statement that, man and boy, Alfredo has been elephant trainer, chorus boy, trapeze artist, equestrian, clown, musician and horse and dog breeder. Of Spanish and English descent, he is the son and heir of Arsine Loyal, who owned and operated the first "tent" circus in Europe.

All on the Same Leash

By an odd quirk of something-or-other, all of the leading "dog acts" of the present day are related, Loyal included. The Gautiers, of "Steeplechase" and "Bricklayer" celebrity, are his nephews. The Gaudsmiths are his cousins, Henry Gordon is his brother-in-law, and Harry Morget another cousin. Until his retirement from the Barnum & Bailey Circus several seasons ago, Alfredo was the sixth generation of Loyals to tread the tanbark. He still has eight of the barks with him!

For the first time in its six years of productional activity, the Falls Church Community Theater will be the beneficiary of professional direction in its next effort. Lillian Buller, professional director and actress, is donating her services as director of "Personal Appearance," Lawrence Riley's brash and gay comedy, which is to be presented in Madison School Auditorium on December 11 and 12. At present Mrs. Buller is working at the Library of Congress, preparing for the leading role of Clytemnestra in the Agamemnon of Aeschylus, which opens in Boston in February.

A Holocaust-in-Your-Hand Note

With Boston as a tragic warning, be careful of those lighted matches—even if you can't see what the program says!

Gayety

We've seen quite a few entertaining and funny burlesque revues here this season, but the current show entitled "Garden of Girls" is the greatest laugh riot offered since the curtain went up at the Gayety late last August.

The biggest reason for this opinion is found in the person of one Billy "Boob" Reed, returning here after an absence of several years and who, we hear, has just been classified 1-A by Uncle Sam. Reed is not only an original comedian whose "skits" are "different" and witty, but a lad whose comedy dialogue and facial expressions keep the audience in a constant uproar.

Lana Barrie, a titian-haired beauty making her first appearance here, is the featured siren of the attraction. Lana sings a bit, does several beauty parades and winds up with a shimmy dance that tops all shimmy numbers. Aside from the shapely Misss Barrie, the distaff portion of the bill offers the charms of Helen Rogers and Joyce Breazelle, the latter a talented and cute acrobatic specialist.

Completing the cast are Parker Gee, a nice looking lad and clever straight man; Harry Meyers, veteran comedian whose comedy efforts in this show rate above par; Dick Millard, tap-dancing artist, and Rudnardt and Rudy, two lads whose gymnastic feats will amaze you.

ART JOHN.

HEDDA HOPPER

A Miniature 'Fantasia'

Hollywood, Calif., Dec. 1.—Those of you who are looking forward to seeing a single feature with a couple of shorts instead of double bills, have a special treat in store for you. It's a short subject in Technicolor called "Engulfed Cathedral," set to De Bussy's composition of that title and there's not a human being in the whole thing.

GROUCHO MARX

Werner Janssen, symphony conductor, directed it, and has been working on it for months. It's his pictorial interpretation of De Bussy's music. That fine cameraman, Bob Bruce, shot it on 16 mm. film, which is now being blown up to 35 mm. and will soon be ready to release to the theaters.

While Janssen's treatment is somewhat suggestive of Disney's "Fantasia," it is more objective. Some of the sea shots were taken up the coast here, but many of the most interesting and imaginative ones, showing the cathedral under water, were made in miniature.

And here we thought that beam of pride in Ann Harding's face was because she's playing Mrs. Joe Davies in "Mission to Moscow"—while all the time it was for her husband, Werner Janssen.

Richard Thorpe, directing "Above Suspicion" at Metro, was shooting a sidewalk scene the other day, with newsboys yelling extras, and the papers he gave them to wave carried the headlines "Italy Invaded." "I didn't know that," chirped one of the kids, "—When did that happen?" "It hasn't happened yet," said Dick, "but it will before this picture's released."

As soon as she finishes her role with Abbott and Costello in "Oh, Doctor!" Ginny Simms will go over to Metro under a term contract.

Pat O'Brien is raving about Robert Ryan, leading man who's in "Bombardier," and says he's the best bet he's seen in a long time. Robert was in "Name, Age, and Occupation," the Pare Lorenz picture which was never finished.

Mozelle Britton (Mrs. Alan Dinehart) writes, from the Riverside hideout where she and Alan have been vacationing, that gasoline rationing is sending them back here.

She says: "Alan is standing by for 'One Man's Army' at Fox, but most of his efforts at the moment are concentrated on a new play called 'Salutary Lodge,' for which he has just closed a collaboration agreement with Joseph Carole, his 'Separate Rooms' collaborator. They hope to have it ready for Broadway in time for the new season. It is a great part for Alan—a 'genteel' Nazi surgeon who operates a secluded sanatarium as a blind for the Gestapo cruelties."

Hear that the reason Virginia Gilmore packed up and went to New York was a quarrel with Fritz Lang. Seems Virginia wanted to do the lead in "Unconquered," but the powers that be said no soap—they would have nobody except Anna Lee do the role.

So Virginia told Fritz if he couldn't wangle her a spot in his own produced and directed as well as original story and co-scripted film, he wasn't the guy she thought he was. And off she went to the big city, leaving Fritz with his ears pinned back.

Victoria Faust, who's been signed for "G-String Murder," is the daughter of a New York minister, and he's given his blessing to her movie career.

One of the best listeners at Earl Carroll's Sunday evening philharmonic concerts is Groucho Marx.

That visit of Gary Cooper's on the Twentieth Century lot may have been intended for a deal there, but didn't end up that way.

Douglas Leavitt, musical comedy star from Broadway, is playing an air raid warden in "Reveille with Beverly," and saving the studio some dough by wearing his own arm band and helmet. He's an honest to goodness air raid warden in Beverly Hills.

Remember Hughie Green, who was in "Tom Brown's Schooldays," "Meet the People," etc. here? He's now a sergeant with the Royal Canadian Air Force, has just received his wings as a bomber pilot, and is now honeymooning in New York with his bride of six weeks, the former Claire Wilson of Montreal.

At his Diamond Horseshoe, Billy Rose discussed the famous paintings he owns with Samuel Grafton, the commentator . . . "I'm an amateur painter," said Grafton. "Have you ever thought of doing any painting yourself " . . . "No," confessed Rose—the No. 1 showman, the former world's shorthand champion and the holder of a top songwriter's ranking at ASCAP—"I'll never start anything at which I know I never could match the top guys."

HEDY LAMARR

During the filibuster by Senator Bilbo of Mississippi against the Pepper-Norris bill to eliminate the poll tax, there was an interval in which only one other Senator was in his seat. That was Senator Gerry of Rhode Island . . . When Bilbo vowed that he would talk until January 3, when the next session begins, Senator Gerry asked him: "What will you do then? Quit?" . . . "Wrong," assured Bilbo. "I get better as I get older."

M-G-M now is preparing to film the movie adaptation of Elliot Paul's best-seller, "The Last Time I Saw Paris." Originally, the producers intended to costar Robert Taylor and Hedy Lamarr in this story. "You can't use them both in the same picture," Paul protested, "because Taylor is as beautiful as Lamarr" . . . Susan Miller therefore will play the leading role in the Paul story. Taylor, in the meantime, discovered that he has other commitments and would be unable to play the newspaperman role in this movie. The job will go to a man who never has acted before this. He was recommended by Elliot Paul. His name is John Hewlett. He's a newspaperman who worked on the Paris Herald.

A. R. Griffin of the Phil. Record contracted to write a book, "Here Come the Marines." The manuscript was due six months ago. But Griffin, adhering to the newspaperman's habit of fighting a deadline, postponed finishing it . . . Howell, Soskin, Inc., the publishers, insisted that he hurry, but Griffin stalled. His wife finally wrote a chapter for him, and this informal history of the Marines was recently published. It was released almost simultaneously with the celebration of the Marine Corps' birthday and the news of the victories in the Solomons and North Africa. And the book critics called, what was procrastination, "perfect timing."

Fred Allen describes Jack Benny's poor physical condition: "Jack can't even use a toothpick, unless it first has been warmed to the temperature of his gums . . . Frank Scully, who's been in and out of hospitals for many years, had an anniversary dinner to celebrate the tenth birthday of his best seller, "Fun in Bed." To the assembled guests Scully exhibited his draft card. Frank has one leg, one lung, and uses two crutches. But after the question "Indentifying marks," Scully's card reads "Wears glasses."

New Stage Farce and New Films for New Week

"THE DOUGHGIRLS" take over the National Theater for one week to foster their festive spirit in our weary Capital. Written by Joseph Fields, who co-authored "My Sister Eileen" and "Junior Miss," the comedy has Washington, itself, for a locale. Max Gordon is the producer and George S. Kaufman is responsible for the staging. Ladies of the cast include Virginia Field, Doris Nolan, Arleen Whelan and Arlene Francis. Opens Monday.

Earle

"YOU WERE NEVER LOVELIER" pairs Fred Astaire and Rita Hayworth in another of their musical-comedy excursions. Many of the songs, written by Jerome Kern, are already on the Nation's list of top tunes. Adolph Menjou and Xavier Cugat and his Orchestra support the stars. The stage show will be headed by the Oxford Boys and the Roxyettes. The new bill is scheduled to replace "Gentleman Jim," whenever he makes his departure.

Capitol

WHITE CARGO." Hedy Lamarr takes over the role of Tondelayo, jungle temptress, in a screen version of the well-known stage play. Walter Pidgeon is the hardened foreman of the rubber plantation who refuses her overtures, while Richard Carlson is the unhappy gent who succumbs to her charms. Frank Morgan, Henry O'Neil and Reginald Owen are onlookers of one character or another. Ben Yost's Vi-King's bring their choral arrangements to the new show on the stage. Opens Thursday.

RKO-Keith's

"7 DAYS LEAVE." A frivolous fling about a drafted musician who spends the above mentioned furlough inducing the girl of his heart to marry him. This would be Victor Mature and Lucille Ball. Mapy Cortez and Ginny Simms do most of the singing to the music of Freddy Martin's Orchestra. The supporting cast includes Peter Lind Hayes, Buddy Clark and Wallace Ford. Opens Thursday.

Palace

"THE MAJOR AND THE MINOR." Ginger Rogers resorts to military tactics, mostly espionage, to attract the attention of the handsome army officer portrayed by Ray Milland. Most of the action takes place in a military preparatory school where her presence results in some unorthodox incidents. Opens Thursday.

Metropolitan

"MY SISTER EILEEN." Hardly pausing for a second breath, the two harassed girls take their adventures in a Greenwich Village apartment to another Warner theater. The plot is already a national legend; suffice to say that Rosalind Russell and Janet Blair have the leading roles supported by Brian Ahearne, George Tobias, Allyn Joslyn and many others. Opens Friday.

Columbia

"THE MOON AND SIXPENCE." Somerset Maugham's popular story of the unconventional painter, told in a unique screen fashion. George Sanders portrays the artist who broke away from all earthly ties to consummate his desire to paint. Herbert Marshall, Doris Dudley and Steve Geray are prominently featured. Opens Thursday.

Little

"CARNET DE BAL." A dramatic study, in episode form, of the individual fates which befell a group of people who once attended the same village dance. France's outstanding actors including Raimu, Harry Bauer, Pierre Blanchar, Louis Jouvet and Marie Bell, are featured. Julian Duvivier, now in this country, directed. Opens today.

Pix

"CITIZEN KANE." Orson Welles' first cinema effort will be revived following the run of "You Can't Take It With You," extended through Friday. The story deals with the life of the fabulous owner of a string of newspapers. The actors include Joseph Cotten, Dorothy Comingore, Paul Stewart, Ray Collins, Erskine Sanford and Agnes Moorehead. Opens Saturday.

Trans-Lux

"THE MASK OF NIPPON," seventh of the "World in Action" series released by the Canadian Film Board, presents authentic documentary scenes of Japanese methods of warfare. "Keeping Fit," also in the program, presents a vital routine for good health, and the cartoon for the week is Walt Disney's "Donald's Garden." Opens Friday.

Energetic Actress

Elsa Lanchester, Mrs. Charles Laughton in private life, is currently Hollydwood's busiest actress, as a result of doubling up on her stage and screen careers.

By day, she is working at M-G-M in "Lassie Come Home," as Roddy McDowall's mother. By night, she is appearing on the stage.

Demands of the two allow her only a maximum of five hours sleep each night.

Beech Tree, No Doubt!

MADELEINE LeBEAU and her surfboard seem to have confused the orchard with the open sea—which, of course, has nothing to do with her being seen next in the Warner Brothers production of "Casablanca"

Sits for Portrait

Nancy Coleman is spending every free moment from Warner Bros.' "Edge of Darkness," posing for her portrait in oil by Karin Van Leyden, noted Dutch portraitist. Hers will be the only portrait painted by Mrs. Van Leyden before the artist returns to New York.

War Hero's Mother Refuses Invitation

Mrs. Albert Wassell, 87-year-old mother of War Hero Corydon M. Wassell, whose life is being filmed for Paramount by Cecil B. DeMille, has rejected an invitation to come to Hollywood.

"There was only one star I ever cared to go that far to see," she wrote her 58-year-old son. "That was Rudolph Valentino and he's dead."

The mother of Lieut. Comdr. Wassell, who lives in Little Rock, Ark., says she doesn't know enough about current film personalities to have a choice of one to play her son, but she has remarked that Jimmy Stewart, whom she saw in her last visit to a motion picture theater several years ago, reminded her of the doctor as a young man.

Harpist's Skilled Fingers Bring Joy to St. Elizabeths Patients

MUSIC AND CHARM—Daphne Hellman, 26, of 1622 Twenty-first Street Northwest, plays the harp for patients at St. Elizabeths Hospital

By Margaret A. Lang
Post Staff Writer

The audience burst into enthusiastic applause when the harpist finished Brahms' Waltz in A flat.

The handsome blond boy didn't take his eyes off the musician. The old man sitting near by said, "My what a fine artist." Two men in uniform resumed their card game and the seaman returned to his crossword puzzle.

This was no ordinary audience before whom Daphne Hellman, 26, formerly of New York and now of 1622 Twenty-first Street Northwest, was playing.

Although she's played at recitals, over television, in churches and hotels, she said yesterday she has never encountered a more enthusiastic audience than at the Red Cross House at St. Elizabeths Hospital.

Margaret Hagan, Red Cross field director, is equally enthusiastic. "Mrs. Hellman's personality plus the music is helpful," she said. "This creates a normal situation which all people should enjoy. A lovely looking girl at the harp is something that all men like to look at and listen to. It isn't the music as such that helps. But this is a way of helping the patients back to normal so that once again they'll be able to lead the kind of life the rest of us lead."

The audience in the large room was for the most part male. To one man, harp music was a completely new experience. Another said he had often heard it in Los Angeles.

"That nice looking boy to whom harp music is familiar probably has pleasant associations with this whole scene. It takes him back to something lovely that happened to him in the past," Miss Hogan said.

She added that the patient level was pretty sophisticated. Among the 7900 inmates are artists, writers, musicians—for St. Elizabeth's draws from enlisted men and officers of all ranks and grades as well as civilians.

Mrs. Hellman's specialty is eighteenth century music and her repertoire includes only one or two modern jazz compositions. But having discovered that "Jingle Jangle Jingle" made the biggest hit, she plans to learn some of the new tunes so that she can intersperse them with classical music during her two days of playing each week.

"I can tell they're enjoying it," Mrs. Hellman said, "because they pause a minute or two before clapping. They're a fine audience and I'm beginning to recognize one or two who always seem to be here when I play."

Miss Hagan explained that Mrs. Hallman plays at the hospital as a volunteer twice weekly, but does not give a formal concert.

"She'll just win an audience as she goes along. The first day she played only about 50 listened. If the music only reaches a dozen we consider it helpful. This develops an interest in a normal pursuit and, at least while she's playing, they are not thinking about themselves. The patients are free to leave if they wish, and they're very severe critics," Miss Hagan said.

Miss Hagan said that, contrary to some people's belief, the patients have high artistic and critical standards. If a bad band or show is brought out they show their disapproval by either leaving the large entertainment lounge or not listening.

"We always ask anyone offering their services how good they are. And often they're not good enough for this audience. These people know a good show as well as any one, and they won't stand for second rate entertainment," she concluded.

British People Appreciate Aid, Society Told

By the Associated Press

New York, Dec. 1.—Mrs. Eugene Meyer, wife of the publisher of The Washington Post, who recently returned from a trip to England, said today that the British people were deeply grateful for the gifts sent over by the American people.

She addressed a luncheon of the British War Relief Society at which Viscountess Halifax, wife of the British Ambassador to Washington, was guest of honor.

Mrs. Meyer said she was "wholly unprepared for it, and embarrassed by being the personal recipient of their thanks" as she described visits to nurseries where she was shown cod liver oil, orange juice, roast beef, dresses and other clothing sent over by Americans.

"This gratitude toward us is intensified by the fact that most of the clothing, blankets, undergarments, food, toys and other things which we sent them were distributed to cold, hungry and destitute families who had lost everything in the blitz," she added.

One such woman in Newcastle, who had been bombed out, insisted, Mrs. Meyer said, that she bring back a letter addressed, "Dear People of the U. S. A.," expressing her gratitude and the gratitude of the people of her village for the American gifts.

"The health of the nation on the whole is excellent," Mrs. Meyer concluded, "because the food rationing system gives more to the poor and less to the rich, which Food Minister Lord Woolton described as a service to both."

Hugh Gibson, former envoy to Belgium, also spoke and said that "if we cannot only maintain but accelerate our help on a big scale, it will serve to convey to the British people an understanding that we as a people are bent on holding up their hands and helping them in time of trial. . . ."

Winant Inspects Goods

London, Dec. 1 (AP).—Ambassador John G. Winant today toured a Red Cross distribution center, inspecting some of six million articles, ranging from operating tables to dishcloths, sent by the American Red Cross to the British.

The gifts are valued at $4,790,000. Winant also saw hundreds of cases of supplies for Russia from the British Red Cross.

Duce Reported Seriously Ill Of Heart Disease

London, Dec. 1 (U.P.).—The Italian military situation, steadily deteriorating under Allied blows has sent Premier Mussolini to bed seriously ill of heart disease, it was reported today.

The reports of Mussolini's illness were unconfirmed but came from usually trustworthy continental sources. They said he had been confined to bed for two weeks. It has been reported intermittently for several years that he was suffering from chronic heart disease.

Should illness or death remove Mussolini, observers believed Italy might collapse, and that King Victor Emmanuel, who is believed to have opposed Italy's entry into the war, probably would resume power and make a separate peace.

Silver Star Awarded

London, Dec. 1 (AP).—Posthumous award of a silver star to Corpl. Hubert Crowell, Lenoir, N. C., for courage and devotion to duty when he lost his life in a Flying Fortress raid over Europe last September 6, was announced today by American headquarters, along with 17 other awards. Crowell was the waist gunner in a B-17 attacked by enemy fighters.

Three Retired Military Doctors To Get Gorgas Medal Dec. 15

The newly-established Gorgas medal for outstanding work in preventive medicine will be presented December 15 to three retired military doctors, two of whom are from Washington.

The presentations will be made as a meeting of the Association of Military Surgeons of the United States, at the Cosmos Club, to Brig. Gen. Jefferson R. Kean, U. S. A., of 2804 N Street Northwest; Brig. Gen. Frederick F. Russell, U. S. A., and Rear Admiral Edward Rodes Stitt, U. S. N., of 1265 R Street Northwest.

The medals will be accompanied by $500 checks.

General Kean was chief surgeon, Department of Western Cuba, when he became active in 1900 in the fight against yellow fever. He was instrumental in formulating many of the important measures concerning the Army Medical Corps, one of which was the creation of the Medical Reserve Corps.

Admiral Stitt was with the Naval Medical Corps for 42 years, 8 years as Surgeon General. He has long been prominent in the field of tropical ills and their prevention.

General Russell did extensive research work in protecting the Army against typhoid and other diseases. For many years he devoted himself to preventive medical work as professor in the Army Medical School, director general of the International Health Board, Rockefeller Foundation and professor at Harvard University.

Californians Told To 'Expect' Bombs

San Francisco, Dec. 1 (AP).—San Franciscans were advised by Maj. Gen. Walter K. Wilson to be alert for "a bold attempt on the part of the Japanese to bomb the city."

"We should not be surprised but ready for any eventuality," the commandant of the Army's northern California sector told the city's civilian wartime council. "The American people do not understand Jap psychology and do not realize the effort they will make to save face."

'44 Budget May Top All in World History

By Irving Perlmeter
Associated Press Staff Writer

Production and strategic plans in Washington, it was learned authoritatively yesterday, are shaping up toward a 100 billion dollar "Victory" budget for the United States in 1944.

Tentative figures for the next fiscal year, beginning July 1, 1943, were described as already exceeding 90 billion dollars, and might be about 100 billion dollars when President Roosevelt sends his annual estimates to Congress the first week in January.

The biggest budget in anybody's history, this pending plan is no portent of when the war will end. For the coming year the war managers seek the maximum weapons and mobilization possible. If the war should end sooner the plans can be canceled. If the war goes past July 1, 1944, these expenditures will be calculated to bring victory as soon afterward as possible.

In the current year the United States is spending for itself and lend-lease slightly more than 70 billion dollars. Much of this spending was improvised as the war scene shifted, because bombs fell on Pearl Harbor right in the midst of last year's annual budget season.

This year more careful planning has been possible. Broad strategic plans of how, when and where the war will be fought are being made up in the tightly guarded conference rooms of the combined chiefs of staff.

The armed services and the lend-lease administration have taken these plans and estimated the requirements in supplies and other costs.

The War Production Board and other agencies have had time to calculate what the factories and mills can produce and what new plants are needed, and what projected plants are not needed.

The President and his budget bureau assistants, particularly Budget Director Harold D. Smith and Assistant Director Wayne C. Coy, have been sifting and resifting the figures and throwing in the smaller needs of other Government agencies.

This is one task that Mr. Roosevelt always has performed personally, although this year he may not have time to red-pencil the budget in such minute detail as before.

In an over-all sense, the budget is expected officially to represent an estimate of the maximum output of all war industries and suppliers. Generals and agency heads may debate how to split this production between airplanes and ships and tanks, but however they divide the pile they expect to get as much as possible.

Another new factor in this year's budget-making is the figuring of price levels. Economic Stabilization Director James F. Byrnes and Price Administrator Leon Henderson thus are having at least an indirect voice in determining the size of the budget. Failure on their part to hold down prices might make the same program now contemplated cost 110 billion dollars or more.

Ringside Table

With Mary Harris

LITTLE JACK LITTLE will not leave El Patio for longer than it'll take him to catch his breath after his long engagement there. He'll close at El Patio on December 17, it's true, but he'll be bringing his unit back on New Year's Eve, praise be! After that the Little Jack Little group will be at El Patio indefinitely—maybe for the duration . . . Owner Johnny Longo is shopping around Broadway for a smart crew to fill in during Little Jack's absence.

Evelyn Nesbit, central figure of the greatest case celebre of the century, will come to Jimmy Lake's Gay Nineties next Monday. She made as many headlines 30 years ago as World War II is doing today.

CESAR AND ROSITA, rated among the most feverish of rumba dancers, will open at La Conga on Friday. They've recently been starred at Leon and Eddie's and the New York La Conga. A new "mystery emcee" will make his bow on the same evening. And next week Owner Milt Barrett says he'll have a new chorus of Pan-American beauties—from Canada.

DICK HIMBER'S MUSIC, as contagious as the measles (but in a nice way), zoomed through Del Rio amid a wave of enthusiasm at his opening last night. Maestro Himber of the Studebaker Champions needs no introduction to the public. He was and is the tops.

"Dances by request" are the specialty of Martinita now at the Shoreham. Name any folk dance of the Allied Nations and she'll perform it. This feat is done by only one other dancer, the great Paul Draper.

KNITTING AND CROCHETING. Harriet Page, pianist at Treasure Island, spends her spare moments knitting socks and mittens for soldiers. Arylene Chandler, singer at T. I., is crocheting scarfs like mad. But they're not for soldiers. They're for her ten aunts.

KEEP YOUR EYE ON the Dave Roberts Trio at the Neptune Room. They show all the signs of a unit that's going to soar to the top of their class. Dexterous arrangements, versatility, sheer musical ability—they have all of these. The customers became so worked up over the Roberts music the other eve that the unit had to stay on the bandstand for a solid hour instead of stepping off after the usual 20-minute interval.

The Friday entry in your date book should read, "Metronome Room. New Jose Morand Orchestra. Zowie!"

INDOOR VIEWS. J. Freddie Coots, composer of "You Go to My Head," listening to its rendition by beguiling Eve Knight in the King Cole Room . . . The exciting view of the cerise and pale gold interior of Ruby Foo's that passersby get through the floor level windows. Folks often walk past for a few steps, then turn around and hasten inside . . . The new Olmsted bar, all ringed round magically with the signs of the zodiac . . . The faces of Plymouth customers who sit in that quarter-hour trance brought on by Michel's violining. Rembrandt should be around to paint them . . . The Irish grin and hectic energy of Ralph Hawkins as he leads his band from the drums at Crossroads. People often say, "He oughta be in pictures" . . . The quantities of navy men you always see in the Anchor Room. They go there first because of the name, but return because of Matt Windsor and Joy Brooks—and that battle wagon interior . . . The serene charm of the Rose Room of the Burlington. The menu is appetizing, the surroundings gracious and the customers are all such evidently Nice People . . . The sea of white tables that always overflows into the lobby from the Mayflower Lounge. At this rate Teddy will be putting tables out on Connecticut Avenue by Easter . . . The amusing gadgets in the entrance lobby at River Bend. Everything from stuffed birds to toy houses.

Songstress at Washington Hotel

BEAUTIFUL, HUH?
I'' Reatha Stevens who sings with Washie Bratcher's band at the Washington Hotel on weekends

Chuck Foster, whose band is raising lovely echoes in the Victory Room, has written a satiric song on gas rationing called "Get Yourself a Horse." What, no buggy?

OF DANCING FEET. That rare and beautiful dance, the Brazilian maxixe, is being performed at the Troika by Estelle and LeRoy. And in exactly the same style in which it was introduced to this country by the great Vernon Castles. . . . A stepping fireball is Frances White, the half-pint of blonde TNT now riff dancing at the Lotus . . . The Balalaika will bring back Ivanoff, its notable dagger dancer of last season, on December 20 . . . There's never been another dancing "line" in town as surprisingly able as the Al Norton Dance Cocktails now at the Lotus. They're acrobats, dancers and beauties.

MUSICAL CAVIARE. "Variations on a Russian Hymn," created and played by Dot Hutcheson of Mayfair . . . "Il Bacio," sung ever so daintily by Earline King in the Dubonnet Room of the Sheraton Hotel . . . "Carino," trilling Latin love song done by the Alberto Rosario group at Restaurant "400" . . . "Indian Summer" as played with warmth and finesse by Roy Comfort's trio at the Lounge Riviera cocktail hour . . . Maestro Alan Holmes' suave vocal soloing of "Paradise Serenade" in the Metronome Room.

Joy Robinson of Hi Hat and Owen and Parker of Paul Young's are old acquaintances from their Miami days at Mother Kelly's. Joy was there for a whole season. But the rollicking Owen and Parker decorated the spot for five solid seasons.

Ayr Hill Garden Club Names Mrs. Freeman

Mrs. Ward B. Freeman has been elected president of the Ayr Hill (Va.) Garden Club. Other new officers are Mrs. John T. Winn, vice president; Mrs. F. C. Teichman, treasurer, and Mrs. Wirt H. Ferguson, secretary.

The organization will again sponsor a Christmas door decoration contest, within the town limits, and Mrs. Lewis V. Gowin has been appointed chairman of the judging committee.

How to Sell a House for $13,500

DO you think women haven't any business ability? Here's proof that they do!

Mrs. H. T. had an eight-room house to sell. It was a comfortable brick house with an acre of beautifully landscaped ground. It was worth $13,500.

She knew that selling a house like this meant telling the right people about it. The "right people" meant those who could afford to buy a comfortable home such as hers.

Like thousands of other Washingtonians, Mrs. H. T. soon discovered that the "right people" meant Post readers. The first day her ad appeared in The Post she sold her house!

What one woman can do, so can you. Selling anything through The Post is easy. Just call NAtional 4200 and an experienced ad-taker will help you write your ad. The cost is very little, too—only 22 cents a line, even less for three or more insertions.

Total cost of $50 loan, repaid in six monthly installments, only $3.58. Many other plans. No endorsers required. No credit inquiries of friends. Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborne

We can't all get to the duplicate tournaments, even any as important to bridge fans as the nationals. The next best thing is to work out hands played by the masters in competition and see how well we would do.

We present three such problems today. Count 30 points each for the first two questions and 40 points for the last; 100 points is top score.

1. Sitting South, you hold these cards:

♠ Q 6 3
♡ J 5 4
◇ A K 9 8 6

The bidding has gone:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Double	?	—

What call do you make?

2. Sitting South, you hold these cards:

♠ 9 8 5 3
♡ J 10 9 7
◇ 10
♣ K Q 8 3

The bidding has gone:

East	South	West	North
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♠	Pass
3 ♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

What is your opening lead:

Today's Hand

Neither Side Vulnerable
SOUTH DEALER

NORTH: ♠ 5 ♡ Q J 7 6 2 ◇ A 10 4 ♣ J 10 6 2
WEST: ♠ Q J 10 9 8 ♡ A 10 9 8 ◇ 8 7 ♣ A 6
EAST: ♠ 6 4 3 ♡ 5 4 ◇ J 9 6 5 3 ♣ 9 7 5
SOUTH: ♠ A K 7 2 ♡ K 3 ◇ K Q 2 ♣ K Q 4 3

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♡	Pass
2 NT	Pass	3 NT	Pass
Pass	Double	Pass	Pass
Pass

Opening lead: Q ♠.

3. This question concerns your play of today's hand. You are sitting South at a three-no-trump contract, and West, who has doubled, opens the queen of spades. How do you handle the deal to take nine tricks?

Answers to Quiz

1. South must show his diamond suit at this time, since such a bid after partner's opening bid is doubled for take-out denies strength and usually is intended to make it difficult for the doubler's partner to respond. With his strong hand South's best call is a redouble; he will have an opportunity to show his diamond later.

2. Most players will open the heart jack in preference to a club, as the heart suit is more solid. A lead from South's club suit is dangerous for he may be able to win two tricks by waiting. The singleton-diamond opening is not attractive, as South holds four trumps and is not too eager to get a ruff.

3. South wins his game by handling the heart suit cleverly. He holds up on the opening lead, but puts on the king when West continues the spade jack. South then leads the three of hearts from the closed hand. This unusual lead is the only play to make the contract. It puts West on the spot, and whatever he decides to do, declarere can develop nine tricks.

South can count only eight tricks—three diamonds, two spades and three clubs—if he drives out the club ace at once. If he attempts to establish the hearts instead of the clubs, they will not break and he still will have to play the clubs for a ninth trick.

As South knows West must hold both aces for his double, for West will have his spade suit established before South can develop his nine tricks.

An ingenious play makes the contract. If he leads a low heart, instead of the king. West is up against it. If West hops up with the ace, the heart suit is established against the bad break and declarer can run home with three no trump, taking four hearts, two spades and three diamonds. If West ducks as actually occured, South gathers in the heart queen in dummy and attacks the clubs. In this way he wins two spades, one heart, three diamonds and three clubs.
